

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. LONDON, JANUARY 15, 1848.

THAT there is great absurdity in the conflict between the law and practice relating to the confirmation of the election of a Bishop, none can deny; and, perhaps, the recent exhibition on the occasion of confirming the election of the Bishop of Hereford, may lead to a correction of the practice—a correction which possibly may be made without the authority of Parliament, while it is quite clear, that the law can only be corrected by Parliament. The case is in reality not very complex. It stands thus:—According to a practice which must have been settled long before the 25th of Henry VIII., and on the foundation of which the most learned civilians profess ignorance, one of the forms attending the confirmation of the election of a Bishop is, that the officer of the Archbishop formally calls upon all persons who desire to object, to come forward and do so, and promises that they shall be heard. But the statute law is, that the Archbishop shall confirm: he has no power to hear and determine whether he will confirm or not. He must confirm simpliciter, or commit a breach of the law. Hence the conflict; he calls upon persons, according to the practice, to come forward and object; but when they have come, he tells them, that he has no authority to hear, and accordingly refuses to hear them. No doubt it is grossly absurd that the people should be called upon to object to a proceeding when their objections cannot be listened to; but there cannot be a moment's question in the mind of any lawyer, that in such a conflict the statute must be obeyed, whatever may be the ridicule that obeying it may throw upon the ceremonial. With reference to the foundation of the practice, those most learned in the ecclesiastical law profess, as we have said, ignorance. "I may observe," says the Vicar-General, (Dr. Burnaby), in giving judgment on the claim of the objectors

(in the case above referred to), to be heard, "that the act itself (the 25 Hen. 8) prescribes no mode of proceeding in the performance of the duty enjoined, nor refers to any: the office whence these proceedings issue supplies none beyond the form now in use, and which has prevailed and been acted upon for a period of 300 years. The citation and præconization may seem to imply the existence of others in the call made by them upon opposers to appear and make their objections; if they have any; but how these objections are to be received, in what form to be made, how to be proved or sustained, and with what result, is nowhere, that I can find, laid down with reference to the ceremony of confirmation by any book of authority, or writer on the law, or the practice thereof, as prevailing and established in this country. Whether in the cases of other countries any such forms of procedure are to be found grounded upon the authority of the canon law, or the decrees of councils, I am unable to say. In the present case we are bound by the statute law of the realm, which affords us no alternative but that of confirming the election which is certified to have been made by the Dean and Chapter of Hereford, or of subjecting ourselves to the pains and penalties of præmunire."

It is to be inferred, no doubt, from the language of the proclamation made for objectors, that, at some time, objectors were heard; and a passage in Blackstone, referring to the lengthened struggle which took place in this country between the Crown and the Roman Catholic hierarchy upon the right to make Bishops, shews plainly, that the citation to objectors was not originally a mere form. "At length," says that learned writer, (vol. 1, p. 379), "when the Emperor Henry V. agreed to remove all suspicion of encroachment on the spiritual character by conferring investitures for the future per sceptrum, and not per annulum et baculum, and when the Kings of England and France consented also to alter the form of their kingdoms, and receive only homage from the Bishops for their temporalities, instead of investing them by the ring and crozier, the court of Rome found it prudent to suspend for a while its other pretensions.

"This concession was obtained from King Henry I. in England, by means of that obstinate and arrogant prelate, Archbishop Anselm; but King John, (about a century afterwards), in order to obtain the protection of the Pope against his discontented barons, was also prevailed upon to give up, by a charter, to all the monasteries and cathedrals in the kingdom, the free right of electing their prelates, whether abbots or bishops, reserving only to the Crown the custody of the temporalities during the vacancy, the form of granting a license to elect, (which is the original of our congé d'élire), on refusal whereof the electors might proceed without it, and the right of approbation afterwards, which was not to be denied without a reasonable and lawful cause. This grant was expressly recognised and confirmed by King John's Magna Charta, and was again established by stat. 25 Edw. 3, st. 6, s. 3."

In this state of things, there was no conflict between the law and the practice, the right of election being by law in the Church, and the veto only in the Crown; and that veto, by express enactment, only to be exercised upon reasonable cause, and therefore, by implication, capable of being exercised upon good and reasonable objections being shewn.

The conflict has been created by the language of the 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, which vests the actual power of confirmation, as well as of nomination, in the Crown, and in most unmistakeable language deprives the Archbishop of all discretion in the matter of confirming and consecrating the elected Bishop. "Be it enacted," &c., (5th section), "and that the person so elected, after certification made of the same election, under the common and covent seal of the electors to the King's Highness, his heirs or successors, shall be reputed and taken by the name of Lord elected of the said dignity and office that he shall be elected unto, and then making such oath and fealty only to the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, as shall be appointed for the same, the King's Highness, by letters-patent under his Great Seal, shall signify the said election, if it be to the dignity of a Bishop, to the Archbishop and Metropolitan of the province where the see of the said bishopric was void, if the see of the said Archbishop be full and not void, and, if it be void, then to any other Archbishop within this realm, or in any other the King's dominions, requiring and commanding such Archbishop, to whom any such signification shall be made, to confirm the said election, and to invest and consecrate the said person so elected to the office and dignity that he is elected unto, and to give and use to him all such benedictions, ceremonies, and other things requisite for the same, without any suing, procuring, or obtaining any bulls, letters, or other things from the see of Rome for the same, in any behalf."

And, by the 7th, "If any Archbishop or Bishop within any the King's dominions after such election, nomination, or presentation shall be signified unto them by the King's letters-patent, shall refuse, and do not confirm, invest, and consecrate with all due circumstance as is aforesaid, every such person as shall be so elected, nominated, or presented, and to them signified as is above mentioned within twenty days next after the King's letters-patent of such signification or presentation shall come to their hands; or else, if any of them, or any other person or persons, admit, maintain, allow, obey, do, or execute any censures, excommunications, interdictions, inhibitions, or any other process or act of what nature, name, or quality soever it be to the contrary or let of due execution of this act, that then every Prior and particular person of his convent, and every Dean and particular person of the chapter, and every Archbishop and Bishop, and all other persons so offending and doing contrary to this act, or any part thereof, and their aiders, counsellors, and abettors, shall run into the dangers, pains, and penalties of the estatute of the provision and præmunire, made in the 25th year of the reign of King Edward III., and in the 16th year of King Richard II."

If then the Crown is empowered by the statute to command the Archbishop to confirm, and the Archbishop is rendered liable to penalties if he do not confirm accordingly, he has plainly no jurisdiction to do any other act than that of confirming. He cannot hear objections, because no objection can, by any possibility, influence his act. His function by the statute is ministerial, not judicial.

The case is, therefore, as we commenced by saying, simply that of a formula of practice being retained, the objects of which have been wholly destroyed by statute. There can be no manner of doubt which must prevail, when we have a plain act of Parliament on the one side, and a practice, inconsistent with it, on the other. But whatever may have been originally the reason of leaving the formula of practice subsisting while the statute destroyed all its objects, it is certainly time that the practice should be corrected and made conformable to the law.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE PRINCIPLE OF TIPPING v. CLARKE, (2 Hare, 383), AND ITS APPLICATION IN PRACTICE.

The question of sufficiency in an answer is one which requires very considerable discretion in applying the authorities, especially having regard to the doctrine not laid down as new, but stated as well settled in Tipping v. Clarke, (2 Hare, 383). If those who originally laid down that doctrine, could have foreseen the uncertainty that it has introduced into the question of sufficiency of an answer, they would probably have hesitated before they guarded against evasive answers by adopting it. For it is scarcely too much to say, that it has operated much more to the injury of honest defendants, than to the advantage of honest plaintiffs. To us it has always appeared, that a rule which lays down that an answer is not sufficient if the defendant, making his own statement of facts, and then averring that, except as appears by that statement, he denies, or is ignorant of the truth of the allegations of the bill, unless in his statement of facts is found a substantial meeting of all the allegations of the bill, is a rule founded on incorrect reasoning. According to the rule, if the bill alleges that the defendant possessed oxen, horses, and other chattels, and then interrogates suitably, and the defendant answers, that he possessed oxen, and save as aforesaid, he denies that he possessed oxen, horses, or other chattels, such an answer is insufficient, because the defendant, it is said, by referring to a preceding answer, intimates that he does not intend a complete denial, but only a denial qualified by some statement; and that, if no such statement is in fact found aforesaid, he is deluding the plaintiff by an evasive answer. The technical answer to this reasoning seems to be, that a reference to a qualification which turns out to be no qualification, is just equivalent to nil, and is in fact no qualification at all. It can scarcely be denied, that, if in answering an allegation of several distinct matters, a defendant were in terms to answer thus:—"This defendant saith, that as to the matters contained in the nth interrogatory he answers nothing, and save as aforesaid, he denies" &c.; and were then to traverse the interrogatory, such an answer, however ridiculous, would be sufficient. It could scarcely be said to delude the plaintiff by expressly referring him to nothing, and then informing, that, except as he had already informed him, he denied his allegation. Now, what difference can there be between an allegation in terms, that the defendant has nothing to say, and an omission to say anything? What difference can there be between a qualification of a specific answer on the face of it being no qualification, and one which is in fact no qualification by being really a nullity? If I refer to something aforesaid as a qualification of what I subsequently say, and, upon looking to what I have before said, it is found that I have said nothing, or, what is equivalent, nothing pertinent to the matter, is not the effect simply that the subsequent statement, being qualified by nothing, is unqualified? Such, we apprehend, is the technical reasoning in answer to the doctrine of Tippling v. Clarke.

The practical and substantial objection to the rule is this, that the form of answering, against which it addresses itself, is rendered necessary by the blending of truth and falsehood so common in bills, from which results a difficulty in answering almost insurmountable, and certainly tending to interminable prolixity if the defendant were bound to answer specifically every item of allegation contained in the bill. To avoid this difficulty draftsmen have resorted to the process of stating, as a substantive recital of facts, all that the defendant has to say on the subject-matter inquired after by the bill, and then to deny or ignore, as the case may be, subject to the qualification of the previous statements, the specific allegations. If he is bound in his substantive statement to give a specific answer to all the allegations of the bill, he is, in fact, bound to do the very thing, the great difficulty of doing which has driven draftsmen into the mode of answering by a general statement of facts, followed by a traverse, "save as aforesaid." However, of the existence of the rule there can be no doubt. But it requires some caution to apply it in practice; and it is not to be assumed that every answer is insufficient in which the defendant omits in specific terms to meet every allegation of the bill in his preliminary statement. The expressions used by Wigram, V. C., in Tippling v. Clarke, (2 Hare, 398), appear carefully to guard against extending the rule so far:—"The rule," says his Honor, "since I have known the practice of the Court, has been, that wherever a defendant denies the bill to be true, save as aforesaid, or except as appears by the other parts of the answer, if there be not found on the answer a clear and sufficient statement which, to a reasonable extent, meets the whole case, the answer is deemed evasive."

Thus, for instance, if a bill interrogated the defendant whether he had oxen, horses, and other chattels, and he were to answer, that he had set forth in the annexed schedule all the animals and chattels that he possessed, and then to traverse the interrogatory, save as aforesaid, we apprehend, that, so far as regards the doctrine of Tippling v. Clarke, such an answer would be sufficient, because the general word "animals" would include all the specific classes of animals inquired after by the bill. But if the interrogatory had referred to some creature not in common acceptance included under the general word "animals," then we conceive such an answer would be insufficient. The very generality of the rule of necessity renders its application somewhat uncertain; and the question, whether an answer framed on this principle is sufficient or not, is in general to be determined more by reference to the bonâ fides apparent upon the whole answer, and by seeing, whether, in substance, the allegations of the bill are answered, than by considering whether a mental reservation is just capable of co-existing with the answer put in.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 3, after reciting, that, in certain boroughs and towns corporate within the district therein mentioned, the mayor, bailiffs, or other chief officers are to be nominated, elected, and sworn at a court leet or view of frankpledge, or some other court, and that by reason of the contrivance or default of the lord or his steward, or such other officer, by or before whom such court ought to be held, in not holding the same, or by some accident, it hath happened and may hereafter, that no due nomination, election, or swearing of such mayor, &c., can be had or made, enacts that in every such case it shall be lawful for the Court of King's Bench, upon motion for that purpose, to award a writ of mandamus, requiring the lord or his steward, or other officer, by or before whom such court ought to be held, to hold or cause to be holden such court leet or other court, and to do every other act necessary to be done by him in order to such nomination, election, or swearing, at such day and time as shall be for that purpose judged proper by the said Court of King's Bench, and shall be appointed in such writ, or to signify to the said Court good cause to the contrary, and thereupon to cause such proceedings to be had and made as in other cases of writs of mandamus granted by the said Court for holding of any court; and of the day and hour appointed in and by any such writ of mandamus for holding such court, public notice in writing shall by such person as the said Court of King's Bench shall appoint, be affixed in the market place within such borough or town corporate by the space of six days before the day so appointed. (Rea v. Melverton, 3 Adol. & Ell. 284).

The court-rolls and books of a manor are of a public nature, in which the tenants have an interest. The lord of the manor, who has the custody of them, is considered in the light of a trustee. Therefore, the tenant of a manor is entitled to inspect and take copies of the books so far as relates to the copyhold in question, and if the lord refuse permission a mandamus lies to compel him. (Rea v. Shelly, 3 T. R. 141; Rea v. Lucas, 10 East, 235; Rea v. Tower, 4 M. & S. 162; Com. Dig., "Evidence," C. 2; Rea v. Almon, Barnes, 23; Hobson v. Parker, Id. 237; Baldwin v. Judge, Id.; Warren v. Giles, 2 Str. 955; Crew v. Saunders, Id. 1005; 12 Vin. Abr. 146; Rea v. The Fraternity of Hostmen, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 2 Str. 1223; Ramsbottom v. Cooper, 2 Chit. Rep. 231; Tidd, 594, 9th ed.; see R. v. Smallpiece, 2 Chit. Rep. 288). The rule in this case is absolute in the first instance, upon an affidavit that the copyhold tenant has applied and been refused. (Reg. Gen., H. T., 2 Will. 4, r. 102). It is not sufficient that the demand be made by an agent only; (Ex parte Hunt, 7 Dowl. 690); and this, although the party is not a tenant on the rolls, if a prima facie title be shewn, or any suit depending. (Res v. Lucas, 10 East, 235; Res v. Allgood, 7 T. R. 746; Res v. Tower, 2 M. & S. 162; 1 Tidd's Prac. 648, 8th ed.).

The application may be made by any of the parties interested; and where there are several interested in the same property, they need not join in the application. The demand cannot be made by the agent of a person authorised by a power of attorney, although the agent's authority is in writing. (Ex parte Hutt, 7 Dowl. 690).

The act for the abolition of fines and recoveries, enacts that a tenant in tail of lands held by copy of court-roll, whose estate shall be merely an estate in equity, shall have full power by deed to dispose of such lands under the act, in the same manner as if they were of freehold tenure; and directs that the deed by which the disposition shall be effected, shall be entered on the court rolls of the manor, of which the lands thereby disposed of are parcel. Therefore, if the lord or steward of the manor refuse to enrol such deed, the Court will compel him by mandamus. It is not necessary to annex a copy of the deed itself in making the application, if the contents are stated in the affidavit. (Crosby v. Fortescue, 5 Dowl. 272; see 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 53).

The Court refused to grant a mandamus to compel the lord of a manor to grant a license to a copyholder to demise his copyhold land, although it was alleged that there was a custom that the tenant might demise for three years without license; and that for a license to demise during a longer period, the lord was entitled to a sum certain for every year of such term, the Court saying that there was no instance to be found of their granting a mandamus to the lord to license under any circumstances. (Reg. v. Hale, 9 Adol. & Ell. 339). Quære, if a suit in equity would lie to compel a lord to grant a license to let a copyhold? (Ballard v. Agard, 6 Vin. Abr. 240, "Copyhold," Y. e.; and see per Lord Denman, C. J., in Reg. v. Hale). So, the Court will refuse a mandamus to the steward of a manor belonging to the Crown, although he may have received his appointment from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, for that act does not divest the legal estate out of the Crown, but merely gives to the commissioners the management of the land revenues. The only remedy in such a case is by petition to the Crown, for no mandamus lies to the sovereign, because there would be an incongruity in the Queen commanding herself to do an act, and also, because the disobedience to a writ of mandamus can only be enforced by attachment. (Reg. v. Powell, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 352; Reg. v. Evans, Id. 355, n.; S. C., 10 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 148; 5 Jur. 605; 4 Per. & D. 719; see 10 Geo. 4, c. 50; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 2; see also, In re De Bode, 6 Dow, 776). So a mandamus will be refused to the steward to accept a surrender into the hands of the lord according to the custom, unless the lord be made a party to the rule. (Reg. v. Evans, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 355; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Wychford, 8 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 251; 7 Dowl. P. C. 709). A mandamus to compel admission cannot properly go to the steward alone, but the lord must be joined in it in order that his interest may be the better protected. (Reg. v. Wychford, ubi sup.).

The steward of a manor is not bound to accept a general surrender of tenements without describing particularly what the tenements are, therefore the Court refused a mandamus to compel him. (Reg. v. Bishop's Stoke, 8 Dowl. 608). The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 53, (Fines and Recoveries Act), only applies to equitable estates of tenants in tail of lands held by copy of court-roll, the Court therefore refused a mandamus to the lord of a manor, commanding him to enter on the court rolls an indenture touching certain customary freehold hereditaments, although it appeared that the steward of the manor was accustomed to give admittances, signed by him to the grantor of such hereditaments, but did not enrol the deed by which they were granted. (Reg. v. Ingleton, 8 Dow, 693). Nor will the Court compel the lord of a manor by mandamus to grant a license for digging brick earth, or doing any act amounting to waste, when the license is not rendered a matter of right by an established fine or otherwise. (Reg. v. Hale, 1 Per. & D. 293; see Scriv. Copyh. 525, 530, 4th ed.).

Where a copyholder in fee devised to his wife for life, and she upon being admitted paid as large a fine as if she had been admitted as tenant in fee; afterwards the heir-at-law surrendered out of court his reversion to such uses as J. S. should appoint, but the steward refused to receive or enrol the surrender, although the Court awarded a mandamus in the first instance; it appearing on the return that the reason for not receiving and enrolling the surrender was, that the surrenderee refused to pay the usual fine, alleging that the fine paid by the widow was not merely for the estate for life but for the reversion. Also the Court held the return good, deciding thereby, that the lord was not bound to receive or enrol the surrender without a further fine. (Res v. Dullingham, 8 Adol. & Ell. 858). So, where the heir of a deceased trustee, not being found, the Court of Chancery appointed A. B. trustee, in order that he might surrender certain copyholds which stood in the name of the deceased trustee. The Court of Queen's Bench refused a mandamus to compel the lord and steward of the manor to accept the surrender of A. B., for the Court of Chancery could of itself compel performance, if it deemed it requisite, and more competent than this Court to regulate the rights of the various parties interested. (Res v. Pitt, 10 Adol. & Ell. 272). So, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the lord of the manor to grant a license to a copyholder to demise his copyhold land, although it was alleged that there was a custom in the manor that the lord should receive 4d. per annum for such a license. Denman, C. J., in delivering judgment, said, "Independent of such a custom, it is plain that the granting or refusing a license is a matter wholly in the lord's discretion; and the question is, what is the operation of such a custom. On the one hand it is said, that if the lord can, notwithstanding the custom, refuse to license altogether, he may indirectly extort a larger sum for a license than the custom warrants; therefore his discretion must be taken away. On the other hand it is argued, that if the custom compels the lord to license, it in effect amounts to a custom to demise without license, paying 4d. per annum, which custom is not directly asserted or pretended to exist; but if it do exist, the tenant may demise on tendering the 4d. per annum, without danger of forfeiture, and does not want the assistance of this Court. No instance is to be found of this Court granting a mandamus to the lord to license under any circumstances. It is said to have been decided, that he may be compelled to do so in equity*." But the authority cited is by no means clear or satisfactory. (Reg. v. Hale, 9 Adol. & Ell. 341).

Where the lord of a manor brought ejectment for lands, claiming them as copyhold, and the defendant, who was a freeholder of the manor, claimed them as such, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to inspect the court rolls of the manor, saying, the plaintiff was not obliged to assist the defendant in making out his title. (Smith v. Davies, 1 Wils. 104). So, where the lord of a manor was indicted for a nuisance in not repairing the banks of a river, the Court refused a mandamus for the prosecutor, though tenant of the manor, to inspect the court rolls, for the purpose of obtaining evidence in support of the prosecution, as a party in a criminal proceeding is not bound to furnish evidence which might ultimately criminate himself. (Res v. Cadogan, 5 B. & Ald. 902).

Wherever the matter sought to be enforced is of a public nature, the execution of it may be, as we have already seen, compelled by mandamus, if there is no other specific legal remedy, or at least no other so effectual remedy; and in the case of a clear public right, if it be important to prevent great immediate public damage or inconvenience to many persons, the Court will interfere, if there be no doubt respecting the obligation, although there may be another remedy, as by indictment, the delay in pursuing which would, in many cases, be inadequate to the relief granted, and, in the end, not so effectual a remedy. (See Res v. The Commissioners of Dean Inclusion, 2 M. & S. 80; Res v. The Severn and Wyre Railway Company, 2 B. & Ald. 646; Res v. The Commissioners of Thames Navigation, cited in Res v. Jeyes, 3 Adol. & Ell. 420; S. C., 5 Adol. & Ell. 811, n.) But if the right or the obligation be doubtful, the Court will refuse the writ, and leave the prosecutor to proceed by indictment. (Res v. The Corporation of Plymouth, MS.; Weal v. The West Middlesex Waterworks, 1 Jac. & W. 358, 370, 373). The proceeding by mandamus has much extended of late years, owing to the great increase of various public corporate bodies; and it is now in constant use to enforce obedience to those duties which by law they are bound. Thus, where a railway company was made under the authority of an act of Parliament, by which the proprietors were incorporated, and which provided, that the public should have the beneficial enjoyment of the same, the company having afterwards taken it up, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them to re-instate it. Best, J., said, "Both upon principle and authority, I am of opinion that the Court ought to grant this mandamus. Numerous applications are made to Parliament by speculative individuals to form these navigable canals and railways: great public benefits are held out as an inducement to the Legislature to sanction these undertakings; and when their sanction is obtained, is it to be permitted to these persons to say that they will do only that which is beneficial to themselves, and disregard entirely the interests of the public? It has been argued, that there is a specific remedy by indictment; and that, therefore, we ought not to grant a mandamus. I think, however, that that objection ought not to prevail in this case, for an indictment does not afford a remedy equally effectual to compel the reinstating of the road, which is the purpose to be answered by the granting this writ. The Court can only impose a fine in case a corporation be convicted upon an indictment, and that fine may be levied by distress from time to time; and, even then, the corporation may elect to repair the road; and, at all events, considerable delay would ensue." (Res v. The Severn and Wyre Railway Company, 2 B. & Ald. 646; see per Denman, C. J., Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway, 10 Adol. & Ell. 565). So, the Court granted a mandamus to a railway company, to complete their line of road, according to the provisions of their act, and to set out their line with the intended deviations within the period limited by the act, and to proceed to purchase the land necessary for making and completing the railway on the application of certain shareholders and land holders along the line, it appearing from the affidavits, that the company intended to execute only a part of their line as far as a certain point, and had no bona fide purpose of completing the work by executing the remainder. (Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Adol. & Ell. 531; S. C., 2 Per. & D. 648; 8 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B. 340). It must distinctly appear on the face of the writ in such a case, that the company are not proceeding bona fide under the powers and authorities of their act of Parliament, either by shew-ing an actual abandonment by them of part of the line, or a total non-compliance with the terms imposed by the act, as to the purchase of lands, &c. A mere statement that the company, when applied to, have refused to purchase lands, is not itself sufficient, for such a statement is consistent with an inability on the part of the company to purchase the lands in question, except upon unreasonable terms. (Ib., 10 Adol. & Ell. 531).

Where an act, incorporating a company for supplying a town with water, empowered them to continue, make, &c. waterworks, weirs, and other like works, and to enter upon all rivers, lands, &c., specified in certain plans, and empowered them to agree for the purchase of lands, the tenants of which were to receive satisfaction, the damages of which were to be ascertained by a compensation jury at the quarter sessions, to be summoned by the company's warrant, directed to the sheriff, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the company to issue their warrant for a jury to assess the damages sustained by a person whose lands were taken. (Reg. v. The Nottingham Old Waterworks, 6 Adol. & Ell. 355; S. C., 6 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 89; 1 Nev. & P. 480). The jury having assessed the amount of compensation, and the company refusing to pay the same or the costs, the Court granted a mandamus to enforce the payment, though the statute made the verdict and judgment records of the court of quarter sessions. (Ib., 6 Adol. & Ell. 355). And in the case of railway companies, canal companies, or other companies incorporated by act of Parliament, if they are empowered to take lands, &c. for the purpose of carrying out their works, and give the parties compensation for injury occasioned thereby, the Court will in all cases interfere by mandamus, in order to compel them to issue their warrant to summon a jury to assess the amount of damage to which the party is entitled, or to make compensation in such way as the act directs; but in order to induce the Court to interfere, there must be a direct refusal; mere delay in attending to the claim is not sufficient to induce the Court to award the writ. (Reg. v. The Wiltshire Canal Company, 8 Dow, 623; Reg. v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 4 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 162; Reg. v. The Brecknock Canal Company, 3 Adol. & Ell. 222; S. C., 4 Nev. & M. 871, per Denman, C. J.; Reg. v. The London Dock Company, 5 Adol. & Ell. 163; Reg. v. The Birmingham Canal Company, 4 Jur. 318; Reg. v. The North Union Railway, 8 Dow, 329; Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway, 5 Jur. 365; 2 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 347; Reg. v. The London and Greenwich Railway Company, 3 Adol. & Ell. 166; Reg. v. The North Midland Railway Company, 2 Railw. Cas. 1; Reg. v. The Blackwall Railway Company, 9 Dow, 558; Ex parte Parkes, 9 Dow, 614). A railway act (4 Will. 4, c. 25*) provided, that all par-

* Sect. 72 enacts, that all parties with whom the said company shall have any dispute shall, at their own costs, before the said company shall be obliged to issue their warrant for the summoning of such jury, enter into a bond with two sufficient sureties to the said company, in a penalty of 100l., to prosecute their complaint, and to bear and pay their proportion of the costs and expenses of summoning and returning such jury, and taking such verdict, and of the summoning and attendance of witnesses, in case any part of such costs and expenses shall fall upon them; or, in case the said company shall have thought fit to issue such warrant, without such bond having been previously entered into, it shall be lawful for the said company, in the said notice of the time and place at which such jury are to be returned as aforesaid to serve as aforesaid, to give notice that a bond, in the said penalty of 100l., with two sufficient sureties, conditioned to bear and pay their proportion of the costs and expenses aforesaid, will be required to be entered into by the said parties to the said company before the said inquiry is commenced; and thereupon, unless such bond be given, the said parties so in dispute with the said company shall not be allowed to be heard, or to produce any witnesses at, or to take any part or share in the said inquiry.

ties having a dispute with the company should, at their own costs, before the company were obliged to issue their warrant for summoning a compensation jury, enter into a bond with two sureties in 100*l*. to prosecute their complaint, and to bear and pay their proportion of their costs on a rule to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue to summon a jury; an objection, that the prosecutors had not entered into such a bond, was held to be too late. (Reg. v. The Northern Union Railway Company, 8 Dow, 329). Under a railway act, the company were required "to make proper watering places for cattle in all cases where, by means of the railway, the cattle of any persons occupying lands adjoining thereto should be deprived of access to their ancient watering places, and to supply the same with water." After this act passed, and during the progress through Parliament of a subsequent act for amending the first act, by an indenture, made between the railway company of the first part, and W. M. of the second part, in consideration, amongst other things, of W. M.'s withdrawing all opposition to the latter bill, the company covenanted, "that they would pay to W. M., as and for the special damage to be thereby occasioned to his estate, and particularly to his mansion-house, the sum of 5000*l*.; and that, whenever any close, &c. of the said W. M. should be intersected by the said railway, the different parts adjoining should be thrown together, and properly levelled &c., and that the company should, at their own expense, make and complete such good and sufficient fences, drains, gates, and other conveniences as might be necessary for the re-dividing of the fields which might be intersected by the railway, and for laying them to the adjoining fields of the same estates, for the purpose of convenient occupation, or otherwise would pay the said W. M. the costs incurred by him in so doing." The 5000*l*. having been paid by the company, notice was given by W. M., under the indenture, to make certain fences, drains, cross-ways, &c., it was objected, that part of the consideration of the indenture was intended in satisfaction of damages complained of. The Court, however, were of a different opinion, and directed a mandamus to compel the company to make the watering places, &c. required by the act of incorporation. (Reg. v. The York and North Midland Railway Company, 14 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 277). So, where an act of Parliament required a company to construct and keep in repair a bridge over a certain river, so as to leave at the point where the river would be crossed the same width of water-way as existed at the passing of the act, and so that there should be at all times a clear height of five feet above the ordinary level, or usual water mark of the river under such bridge for the passage of boats; and that, if notice in writing be given to the company by any owner of land adjoining, &c. the railway, that the said bridge is not made, &c. according to the act, it should be lawful for any such owner, &c., as often as there should be occasion, to apply for, and obtain, from a justice of the peace, orders enabling such person to make the bridge, &c. accordingly; and that the reasonable expenses thereof should be defrayed by the company, and, in case of their neglect, &c. to pay them for the space of fourteen days after demand, that such expenses might be recovered and levied in such manner as any other money was by the act directed to be recovered from the company. On the 10th September, 1844, notice was given to the company, requiring them to construct the bridge so as to have the same width of water-way, &c., and so that there should be a clear height of five feet above the ordinary level, &c. of the river. On the 21st September, the solicitors of the railway company wrote, that it was the intention of the company to make the bridge of the clear height of five feet, as required by the act, and that they were instructed to accept service of process, in relation to the other matters mentioned in the notice. Application was again made to the company upon the last-mentioned matters, by letters, on the 25th September and 20th October following, but no answer was received from the company. The Court having granted a rule nisi for a mandamus, it was objected, that there was no sufficient refusal to ground the application; the Court, however, were of a different opinion, and awarded a peremptory mandamus, at the same time intimating that they considered the application to a justice of the peace, as provided by the act, was not such a remedy as would induce the Court to refuse the writ. (Reg. v. The Norwich and Brandon Railway Company, 9 Jur. 1035).

LONDON, JANUARY 22, 1848.

THE recent case of Reg. v. Chadwick, in the Queen's Bench, has decided that a marriage with a deceased wife's sister is void. We understand that this judgment has been appealed from, but questions involved in it are of so much interest, that we think a resumé of the arguments used by counsel, and of the reasons on which the decision was founded, will not be unacceptable to our readers at the present time.

The subject was presented to the Court in the form of a judgment of acquittal in a case of bigamy, upon which judgment a writ of error was brought in the Queen's Bench.

The prisoner, after the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, and after the decease of his first wife, had married her sister, and then during her life had married another woman. The question, therefore, was, whether, since that act, his marriage with his deceased wife's sister was void.

The arguments for the Crown were substantially the following:—The act 5 & 6 Will. 4, declares that marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity shall be absolutely void; such degrees, however, must be those which are prohibited by the statute law of England, which, on this subject, is contained in the 32 Hen. 8, c. 38. By the last-mentioned act, all marriages contracted between lawful persons (who are thereby declared to be such persons as are not prohibited by God's law to marry) shall be valid, and no prohibition, God's law except, shall impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees. This statute being in restraint of marriage, must be construed strictly against the prohibition. Such a marriage as this is not forbidden by God's law, nor is it within the Levitical degrees. Levit. (c. xviii. v. 18) impliedly allows it. The Court will not add to the number of marriages therein prohibited, others which are said to be forbidden pari ratione. The decision in Harrison v. Burwell (Vaugh. 206) gave the true interpretation to the statute of Henry the Eighth; and although ecclesiastical influence caused that decision to be overruled in Hill v. Good, (Vaugh. 302), the reasons given for the judgment in the latter case shew that it cannot be supported. All subsequent decisions which have taken place on its authority must fall with it. The stats. 25 Hen. 8, c. 22; 28 Hen. 8, c. 7; and 28 Hen. 8, c. 16, declaring what God's law on this subject is, were repealed by stats. 1 Mary, sess. 2, c. 1, and 1 & 2 Phil. & M. c. 19, and are not revived by 1 Eliz. c. 1. The canons do not, proprio vigore, bind the laity.

For the prisoner, it was contended, that the object in passing the act of Will. 4 was to adopt the table commonly known as the table of prohibited degrees, and to render void such marriages as had been voidable by the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts. This puts a plain and popular meaning on the statute. The former practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts was uniformly against the validity of these marriages. The 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, prohibiting such marriages, is still in force. The Levitical law forbids them. The Court will feel bound by the long series of decisions, (thirty in number, and extending over three centuries), although it may not assent to the reasoning on which they are founded. The Scotch law distinctly forbids such marriages, and great inconvenience would result from holding a different rule in this country.

The judgment of the Court may be said to have mainly rested on the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, which we, therefore, here give at length. The 1st section recites, that "whereas marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees are voidable only by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Courts, pronounced during the lifetime of both the parties thereto, and it is unreasonable that the state and condition of the children of marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees of affinity should remain unsettled during so long a period, and it is fitting that all marriages which may hereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity should be ipso facto void, and not merely voidable;" and then enacts, that "all marriages which shall have been celebrated before the passing of this act between persons being within the prohibited degrees of affinity shall not hereafter be annulled for that cause by any sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court, unless pronounced in a suit which shall be depending at the time of the passing of this act, provided that nothing hereinbefore enacted shall affect marriages between persons being within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity." The 2nd section then enacts, that "all marriages which shall hereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity shall be absolutely null and void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

The question as to the construction of this last section resolves itself into an inquiry as to the meaning of the words "prohibited degrees." These words are used no less than six times in the act; and it cannot be supposed that they were intended to bear a different sense in one part of the act to that which they bear in another. In the preamble, they are explained to mean such prohibited degrees as rendered marriages voidable by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Courts pronounced during the lifetime of the parties; and, therefore, the same meaning is to be given to the words in the 2nd section. The act therefore recognises the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Courts, and refers to their decisions as something well known. According to the current of those decisions for a very long period, founded on the case of Hill v. Good, a marriage with a deceased wife's sister was voidable, as being within the prohibited degrees of affinity. Such marriage, therefore, is within the prohibited degrees, which now, by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, render a marriage void. Such may be said to form the gist of the judgment in this case; but the learned judges also relied on the stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, and, as a guide to its construction, the statutes passed about the same time in pari materia, 25 Hen. 8, c. 22, 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, and 28 Hen. 8, c. 16, and also on 2 Inst., p. 683.

The reader is referred to the judgment itself for the arguments derived from these sources.

LONDON, JANUARY 29, 1848.

In the course of the arguments used on either side in the application now pending before the Court of Queen's Bench, for a mandamus to compel the Archbishop of Canterbury to hear the objectors to the confirmation of Dr. Hampden's election, the doctrine of presuming law from practice was commented upon. It was asked, on the one side, if the calling of objectors and the hearing them is not the legal course, if it is a mere form, why it is persisted in? It was answered on the other side, that idle forms are not peculiar to the confirmation of Bishops; and allusion was made to the form persisted in at a coronation, of the champion throwing down his gage, and calling on challengers of the King's title.

It would, indeed, be a curious thing in the eyes of English lawyers, if the retention of useless forms could be argued from, in order to establish some rule of law, or if it were to be always considered necessary to suppose some reasonable cause for such retention. For if there be any one feature in the English system of judicature stronger than another, we might go further, and say even, if there be one feature in the English mind stronger than another, it is that sort of vis inertiae, by the effect of which, forms that have long been used are clung to with an almost inconceivable tenacity of affection, although their object may have been abolished, or at least intended and sought, by the application of all known means, to be abolished. If we were disposed to take the most favourable view of this feature of our national, and peculiarly of our legal mind, we should attribute it to the caution and love of property which incline most Englishmen to destroy nothing that is not visibly noxious, under the idea, that, although apparently useless, it may have a latent use. Were we disposed, on the contrary, to view it with unfriendly eyes, we should attribute it to simple heaviness of character. Whatever be its cause, of its existence there can be no doubt; and there is, probably, no civilised people in whose polity, and especially in whose system of laws, the retention of obsolete and useless forms and ceremonies is so frequent. The practice of our law is marked by it at every step. Take the commonest of all transactions. If a man borrow money, and gives his bond for it, he is startled by finding that he is made to bind himself to pay twice as much as he has borrowed. True it is, that he is not so bound, but is bound only to pay what he has borrowed, with interest; but the old form, which was originally not mere form, (because originally the debtor was compelled to pay the whole penalty if he did not pay the money actually borrowed in manner specified in the bond), is religiously retained; and an attorney who should be rash enough to frame a bond otherwise would be looked upon as a sort of conveyancing Pariah. Again, in our pleadings: what can more perfectly exhibit the retention of mere forms long after their practical use has wholly ceased, than the whole proceeding in ejectment, or the trial of a feigned issue out of Chancery. No doubt, there were formerly good and sufficient reasons for adopting the circuitous proceeding of trying a title to land, as between the claimant and the person in possession, by the claimant creating a fictitious lessee, who is to be turned out by the person previously in possession, and then to bring an action to recover his term. But as all these goings to and turnings out, and making of terms, are now purely fictitious, and exist only upon the pleadings, their retention there, or at all, is simply the result of our habit of not liking to disturb forms. So in the case of an issue out of Chancery. Every lawyer knows that the form of such an issue is a mere form. The parties never having laid a wager at all, and the true question not being who has won the wager, but the truth of the heirship, or other fact which is the subject of the imaginary wager. Nevertheless, the form remains of so trying at law the truth of facts on which the Court of Chancery desires to be informed, simply, in all probability, because it is less troublesome to proceed on the form (which, except that it is the established form, is utterly useless) than to frame a form of proceeding more consistent with reason. Again, if we turn to equity pleadings, every equity pleader knows, that, until very lately, the charge of combination was retained in bills; and bold, indeed, was the first draftsman who omitted it, although it was perfectly established that it had long been quite useless, and that it need not be answered; so useless was it, indeed, that Lord Redesdale only conjectures its original object. As another instance, may be mentioned the practice on what are termed sometimes mandatory injunctions, often discussed in this Journal; a practice according to which, courts of equity have pertinaciously adhered to a form framed on the principle of repudiating the jurisdiction to order an act to be done on motion, for more than a century after the jurisdiction has been, in substance, assumed and exercised.

Numberless instances of the same habit of retaining perfectly obsolete forms might be found in the practice of Parliament; but we have said enough to recall to the recollection of our readers, that there can be no more unsafe kind of legal argument than that which proceeds on the assumption, that, for every practice, there is a reason. No doubt for every practice there has been at some time some, sort of reason. But an argument that, because we find a form, therefore there must be a use for it, is one that is not supported by the history of the English law, or founded upon a due appreciation of the English mind.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

HILARY TERM.—11 VICTORIA.—Jan. 27.

This Court will, on Tuesday the 8th day of February next, and four following days, hold Sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business now pending in the Paper of New Trials and in the Special Paper, and will also proceed to give judgment in certain of the matters that will then be standing over for the consideration of the Court.

THOS. WILDE.

GRAY'S INN, Jan. 27th, 1848.—The Lecturer on the Law of Real Property and Conveyancing gives notice, with the sanction of the Treasurer and Benchers of this Society, that there will be a voluntary examination for honours, in the English laws of real property, in the Hall of Gray's Inn, in Trinity Term, namely, on Wednesday, the 7th June next. All students for the bar will be qualified to stand on this occasion who attend and join in the ordinary lecture examinations, meetings, and other exercises which take place in Gray's Inn Hall between the months of January and June; and the position of the candidates will depend upon the results of the examination on the 7th June, in connexion with those of the ordinary exercises before mentioned. The names of successful candidates alone will appear in the class-list, so that those who do not think proper to go in for honours, or who do not succeed, will not be prejudiced.

AGREEMENT—PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN AMBIGUITY.

Among the rules of law which may be regarded as thoroughly settled and understood, (if any such there be), are those which govern the admission of parol evidence to explain, vary, or contradict written instruments. That written instruments, and the words and expressions used in them, are to be construed with reference to the subject-matter,—that evidence is admissible to shew, that, among the parties to, and with reference to the subject of, the instrument, words used in it had by usage a meaning different from the ordinary meaning,—that evidence of all circumstances and matters of fact in any way connected or supposed to be connected with the subject-matter of the instrument, is admissible, in order to enable the Court to ascertain its meaning with reference to those circumstances; (as in Shortrede v. Cheke, (1 Adol. & Ell. 59), where parol evidence was allowed to shew what note was in the minds of the parties to a guarantie, which referred to "the promissory note,")—that, where expressions in a writing, having grammatically a precise meaning, are found, upon reference to the circumstances, to be equally applicable to two or more things, only one of which could be meant, (as where a testator gives his black horse to his cousin John Smith, and it appears that he has two black horses and two cousins named John Smith), then parol evidence of intention is admissible to shew which was meant, to explain what is called the latent ambiguity;—but that where expressions in a writing are grammatically inconclusive—are in form indefinite and ambiguous, no evidence either of fact or of intention can be admitted for the purpose of removing that patent ambiguity,—that, in short, (with the single exception allowed in the case of a latent ambiguity), no addition to or correction of a writing can be supplied by parol evidence, so as to affect the construction and operation of the writing itself, although, when other rules of law do not forbid, the operation of the writing may be controlled, and what is deficient in it supplied by parol proofs of other matters capable of operating independently of the writing and notwithstanding its existence,—are propositions which are generally thought to be equally indisputable and elementary. It was, therefore, with no little surprise, that we read in the judgment in the recent case of Goldshede v. Swan, (1 Exch. Rep. 154), the following unqualified dicta:—"Where any written instrument is ambiguous, evidence is receivable to construe its meaning, but not to alter or vary in any manner the terms of that instrument. . . . The expression 'this day' may mean something which has been done or which is to be done this day. Evidence may, therefore, be properly admitted to explain its meaning, though not to contradict it." Per Pollock, C. B.—"The expression may mean either; how, then, are we to arrive at the real meaning? The cases of Haigh v. Brooks and Butcher v. Stewart decide that parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of explanation. Those cases are in point. The expression here is equivocal." Per Rolfe, B.—Mr. Baron Parke expressed himself more cautiously, in terms to which we shall presently refer, and from which it may be surmised that the Court did not intend to lay down the proposition which the passages we have cited seem to express. What the Court actually decided, and probably intended to express, is a very different point, which is unaffected by direct authority other than a dictum in Haigh v. Brooks.

In Goldshede v. Swan, the question was, whether in a guarantie the words "In consideration of your having this day advanced to V. D. the sum of 750*l.*, secured by his warrant of attorney, payable on the 22nd of August next," sufficiently stated a sufficient consideration for the promise to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, it being conceded that the writing must express a consideration not already executed. Evidence that the money was not in fact advanced before the execution of the guarantie was admitted at the trial. The guarantie was held sufficient. Parke, B., said:—"I entertained some doubt at first whether the consideration which appears on the face of this guarantie was sufficiently ambiguous to let in an explanation. But on the authority of the cases of Haigh v. Brooks, (10 Adol. & Ell. 309), and Butcher v. Stewart, (7 B. & C. 423), I think it is; I think that the evidence was properly admitted, not for the purpose of contradicting the instrument, but to explain the meaning of its terms. It was proved that no money had been advanced before the execution of the instrument, it must, therefore, be read as pointing to future advances; and there is nothing inconsistent or unnatural in this construction. Upon this ground the Queen's Bench proceeded in Haigh v. Brooks, and nobody can doubt that, in that case, the memorandum might be read as referring to a past event. So, in Butcher v. Stewart, it was shewn, that no release had been procured, and the time was held to be a future one. Butcher v. Stewart was recognised in Tanner v. Moore. Now, reading this instrument with the facts given in evidence, there is nothing inconsistent with its being for a future event. I however found my opinion upon the cases of Haigh v. Brooks and Butcher v. Stewart."

When the learned Baron speaks of doubting whether the words were sufficiently ambiguous to let in an explanation, he means to say, whether the words had not so conclusively one meaning, that evidence to give them another was inadmissible. The expression is remarkable, and the meaning not less so. It professes to found the decision on the well-known rule, that you may shew by extrinsic evidence, that words which in ordinary use have one meaning, must or may have been used by the parties to the writing in a different sense, given to them by some special usage, evidence in short to shew that an expression belonging to the ordinary language of the community was also an expression belonging, with a different meaning, to the dialect of some particular class in the community, and that that dialect was the language which the parties were using. But that rule has nothing to do with degrees of ambiguity. The word "banker" has a known meaning in common parlance. In the language of sculptors, it means a support for a model; and evidence of its meaning in that language would be admitted to explain a written contract with a sculptor, but not because the expression was of itself "sufficiently ambiguous," for no word could be less ambiguous, or could more conclusively express a definite meaning. But there is no authority, within our knowledge, independently of the dicta in the case under consideration, for saying, that an expression which on the face of it is capable of more than one meaning, can be fixed to one meaning by evidence. In Shortrede v. Cheke, (1 Adol. & Ell. 60), Littledale, J., went so far as to suggest that, in the case of a guarantie, even a latent ambiguity could not be explained by parol evidence, and this, perhaps, is a legitimate deduction from the strict principle established by Wain v. Warlters, viz. that no part of the contract can rest on parol evidence. A guarantie expressed to be "for a valuable consideration," or "in consideration of what A. B. has this day agreed to do," would be clearly insufficient, and yet parol evidence of the nature of the consideration would be admissible under the ordinary rules of interpretation, but for the Statute of Frauds. How can the writing be said to state the consideration, when parol evidence is necessary to shew that what is stated was a consideration at all?

Were the words in Goldshede v. Swan inconclusive or ambiguous? We think not. If the words had been, "In consideration of your having advanced," could it be said that they referred to anything but a past act? And if so, could the addition of greater particularity reverse the meaning? "Having advanced"—when? Whether the answer is "yesterday," or "to-day," the reference is equally to a past act. The assertion by Rolfe, B., that the words may mean either "that you have this day advanced," or "that you shall have this day advanced," is rather bold. We remember nothing like it in the books, except Love's case, the report of which is scarcely to be depended on:—

"Lady Nancy she died, as it might be, to-day, Lord Love he died to-morrow;" &c.

Alderson, B., said, that if the words had been "having advanced yesterday," the evidence would not have been admissible. Of course not, (yet for any other purpose, and independently of the Statute of Frauds, such evidence would have been admissible under the rule "falsa demonstratio non nocet.") And if the words had been "having advanced to-morrow," or "in a few hours after this time," the expression would not have been coherent, though it might have had a meaning attributed to it under the rule "Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam." But we know no rule that allows of the turning of good grammar into bad, for the purpose of changing its meaning. (See Roscorla v. Thomas, 3 Q. B. Rep. 234).

The decision was not, and could not have been based on the fiction that a day is in law an indivisible point of time; for it is clear, that if in fact the advance had been completed before the execution of the guarantie, though on the same day, (as if the lender had, within an hour after the advance, on hearing reports touching the solvency of the borrower, asked for a guarantie), the consideration would have been insufficient.

Granting the expression to have been ambiguous, it was a patent ambiguity, and, therefore, not explicable by evidence. Now the authorities subsequent to Wain v. Warlters clearly establish this proposition, that though "the consideration need not be stated in express words on the face of the instrument, but may be collected or implied from the instrument itself," it must be so collected, not as matter of conjecture, but with certainty." (Per Patteson, J., in James v. Williams, 5 B. & Adol. 1111). "It would, undoubtedly, be sufficient in any case if the memorandum were so framed that any person of ordinary capacity must infer from the perusal of it, that such and no other was the consideration upon which the undertaking was given. Not that a mere conjecture, however plausible, that the consideration stated in the declaration was that intended by the memorandum, would be sufficient to satisfy the statute, but there must be a well-grounded inference to be necessarily collected from the terms of the memorandum, that the consideration stated in the declaration, and no other than such consideration was intended by the parties to be the ground of the promise." (Per Tindal, C. J., in Hawes v. Armstrong, 1 Scott, 668; see Cole v. Dyer, 1 C. & J. 464). These observations are in point, although they were made with reference rather to an imperfect statement of the connexion between the supposed consideration and the promise, than to an imperfect statement of the consideration itself.

We now come to the authorities on which the Court relied in Goldshede v. Swan. In Haigh v. Brooks, (10 Adol. & Ell. 309), the action was brought upon a guarantie made in consideration of the giving up of a former guarantie. The original guarantie was thus expressed:—"In consideration of your being in advance to L. in the sum of 10,000*l.*, for the purchase of cotton, I hereby give you my guarantie for that amount in their behalf." It was contended that this guarantie did not necessarily imply any other than an executed consideration, and was, therefore, void, and being void, the surrender of it was not a good consideration for the second guarantie. It was held, in the Queen's Bench, on demurrer to a plea of the invalidity of the first guarantie, and afterwards in error, that the second guarantie might be good. The Court of Queen's Bench suggested that the words in the first guarantie did not necessarily express a past consideration; but they said, whether that guarantie was available or not within the doctrine of Wain v. Warlters, there might be many reasons for one party desiring to keep it, and the other desiring to give it up, and, therefore, the giving it up was a sufficient consideration. In the course of the argument in the Exchequer Chamber, the Court allowed that the giving up of a doubtful point of law, (i. e. doubtful to the parties), might be a good consideration; and Lord Abinger frankly admitted that it would be carrying fiction too far to say that the Courts must always know how the law will be. But the judgment in error was given on the ground that the first guarantie contained an ambiguity that might be explained by evidence; and it was added, that, with the exception of Maule, B., who doubted, all the judges were of opinion that the giving up of the paper, without reference to its contents, was a sufficient consideration.

Upon this case it might be sufficient to remark, that the decision would have been the same had the judges been of opinion that the original guarantie was bad, or that it was good on the face of it, without the aid of extrinsic evidence. But, granting to the dicta in that case the full weight of decisions, the case remains entirely distinguishable from Goldshede v. Swan. In Haigh v. Brooks the expression was, "in consideration of your being in advance," an expression which refers strictly to the present time, certainly not to the past; and is not incapable of a prospective meaning. By itself it means, most obviously, but not necessarily, a state of things co-existing with the promise. Add words of futurity to it, ("in consideration of your being at the end of this year in advance"), and it has necessarily and exclusively a prospective meaning; add retrospective words to it, and it becomes nonsense, ("in consideration of your being yesterday in advance"). But the words in Goldshede v. Swan do not refer to the present time, necessarily refer to the past, and become nonsense by the addition of words of futurity.

The words in Butcher v. Stewart, (11 Mee. & W. 857), were nearly the same as in Goldshede v. Swan, but the Court expressly decided the case on the ground that the contract was not within the Statute of Frauds, and said there was considerable doubt whether the memorandum could have been sufficient to satisfy the statute. The case of Tanner v. Moore, (15 Law Jour., N. S., Q. B., 391), said by the Court to have recognised Butcher v. Stewart, involved an entirely different point, and was a mere repetition of the decision in Payne v. Wilson, (7 B. & C. 423), that the words "in consideration of A.'s having agreed to stay proceedings," implied a present or continuing consideration, on the obvious ground that the proposal or request must precede the promise. All that the Court, in that case, said of Butcher v. Stewart was, that it went farther than the case before them.

* Goldshede v. Swan must, therefore, stand upon its own authority, and must be taken as introducing, certainly not the general rule for the explanation of ambiguities which we have cited from the judgments of Pollock, C. B., and Rolfe, B., but some special rule for the construction of agreements within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, though what that rule was intended to be, we confess ourselves unable to guess.

Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint Charles Simms, Esq., to be Chief Clerk and Registrar of the Supreme Court, and Clerk of the Central Circuit Court, of the island of Newfoundland.

LICENSE OF COUNSEL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST*."

Sir,—Your recent exposition of the rule of advocacy, agrees, I believe, with the common voice of the Profession. Very few, perhaps, would limit the exertions of counsel more narrowly than you have done; certainly none would sanction a more extended license. The rule, as I understand it, is in plain terms this: that an advocate may not lie directly to the Court, but may lie indirectly: nay, must do so, if it will promote the success of his advocacy; for all that counsel may do, he is bound to do for his client. You hint a doubt whether this rule is consistent with morality, but do not pursue the inquiry. Now, surely, Sir, if it be important, as you say, that the rule should be authoritatively settled and promulgated, in order to furnish the bar with an answer to the taunts of the laity, founded on such scandalous escapades as those of Phillips, Kelly, Ballantine, and Seymour, it is also important that the rule should be so settled as to enable the Profession itself—taunts or no taunts—to pursue its calling unmolested by any conflict between its sense of honour and its notions of professional duty.

The problem of morality, involved in the settlement of the rule, is perfectly elementary. A candid and cautious inquirer after truth seeks for all possible views and arguments, sits in judgment on all, and dismisses none without demonstration of their insufficiency. For obvious reasons, such an investigation cannot be left to the unaided, unstimulated, and unwatched exertions of the tribunal or judge to whose impartiality the decision is entrusted; nor are the parties themselves competent adequately either to aid or to criticise the proceedings of the Court. Therefore, advocates on each side are interposed, having between them the best advantages for, and the strongest inducements to, a thorough turning over and debate of the subject in every way likely to assist the mind of the judge, but being individually disqualified by their position to form an impartial opinion on the merits of the case. Therefore, the advocate must never prejudice the issue. He has merely to assist in the preliminary investigation—that to discover and suggest every view and argument that can be presented in a plausible shape. This is the whole of his business: to assist—not to impede—not to decide. He is not, therefore, to suggest facts falsely—to misrepresent or conceal the effect of evidence—to misstate or keep back authorities—to use art to disguise a fallacy. He may utter fallacies, because his business is to present all plausible arguments and to judge none, but he must present them ingenuously. In civil cases, though he is to misrepresent nothing—to gain nothing by a trick, he is to take care that his client is not defeated except upon strict legal proofs and legal grounds, whether his cause be morally just or not. Therefore, he is not to bring forward or disclose any adverse fact, whether accessible to his adversary or not. For, besides the mischief of uncertainty which would be introduced by any pretorian interference with settled rules of law and evidence, it cannot be known in each case how, upon taking a balance of all transactions between the parties, the particular issue ought justly to be decided. If the plaintiff is a Sir Giles Overreach, it may be just that he should be defeated of a substantial legal right by a mere technicality. But the community has an interest, paramount to any individual interest, in uniformity of decision. Therefore, though an advocate in a civil cause may suppress facts, he must not suppress law, nay—he must, as has been emphatically declared more than once from the Bench, interfere to save the Court from inadvertently disturbing the law in favour of his client, if he is aware of any principle or authority, overlooked by the Court, which would guide it to a right decision. If this were not so, the assumption by a looker-on of the character of amicus curiæ would be an impertinent intrusion.

In criminal cases a further public interest is at stake,—that crime should not escape unpunished. Here the sole function of the advocate is the guardianship of innocence and of the law. He must take care, above all things, whether he be prosecutor or defender, that the innocent do not suffer. Subject to that care, he must see that the rules of law, as well those devised for the punishment of guilt, as those interposed by way of counter-check for the protection of innocence, suffer no impair. To aid in the escape of the guilty is no part of his office. Actively to assist in the conviction of the guilty is no part of his office, if he be defender, because the imposition of such a duty would frustrate the ends for which advocacy is instituted. But, as a member of the community, he is bound to assist in the detection of guilt, and from this duty his peculiar office does not discharge him. Therefore, the advocate of a prisoner must by no means leave unnoticed, much less endeavour to put out of sight, any matter of evidence or law tending to criminate his client. He is not to prejudice his cause, and, therefore, should not refuse to defend him, however adverse the evidence may be, because that evidence will come before those who are competent to deal with it. But if he knows positively and peculiarly, (as by confession, &c., and not as a mere inference from the evidence before the Court), that the prisoner is guilty, then it is perfectly clear, that, except so far as mitigatory circumstances or the conservation of the law may justify an intervention, he must not defend him. Whatever he knows against the prisoner he must communicate; what he can urge in his favour, consistently with that communication, he may urge. I have shewn sufficient ground for the rule, but this further reason occurs. In a doubtful case, depending on circumstantial evidence and testimony not known to be trustworthy, every picture of the occurrence that is founded on the evidence only must be more or less conjectural; but an advocate in the confidence of a guilty prisoner, knowing the whole truth in detail, has an immense advantage over the Crown in examining witnesses, and commenting on the evidence. It needs, however, no argument to shew that the escape of the guilty can in no case be the legitimate aim of any individual in the state.

Subject to the restrictions I have pointed out, restrictions to which an honest mind instinctively conforms, it is the duty of an advocate to devote himself unreservedly to his client's interest,—and thus understood (as it was intended to be understood), the celebrated (monstrous, it has been called) declaration of Lord Brougham in Queen Caroline's case is strictly and coldly correct, though it was spoken under the excitement of a most just indignation, and with an application that would have excused almost any amount of exaggeration.

The practice of the bar falls far short of the moral standard, and its opinion not less so. The anecdotes current in honour (!) of distinguished Nisi Prius leaders are so many instances of clever professional sharpening. We may as well confess this at once; for it is no pardonable esprit de corps, but ridiculous fatuity, that claims for our order a spotless perfection which we are conscious it does not possess, and which, insist on it as we may, the rest of the world will never acknowledge. "The wine we drink is made of grapes;" and so long as the bar continues to be recruited from mere humanity, its peculiar temptations will yield their appropriate fruit. As, without disrespect to the merits of either order, we may say, that hypocrisy is developed by the priestly employment, and charlatanism by the medical, so a greater or less indifference to truth and justice is one of the evil products of forensic practice. Instead of denying its existence, let us rather rejoice that the deteriorating influence has been allowed less scope in this country than elsewhere, and strive to counteract it still more effectually. We do not yet, as in France, embrace a prisoner whose confession is in our pocket; and it is in exception to the rule, if we shed tears over a murderer. Much that is indefensible in the practice of the bar is occasioned by jury trial,—an ancient and once invaluable piece of armour, which we obstinately persist in wearing, although, by change of circumstances, it has become a nuisance of the first magnitude. The Old Bailey and Nisi Prius arts, that shed a moral infection over every branch of practice, would cease to exist if the tribunal upon which alone they can be successfully exercised were abolished. I have little knowledge of the equity bar; but I believe, that in morality (measured by the unprofessional standard) that side of Westminster Hall ranks higher than its neighbour; and I take the sole reason of the difference to be, the non-existence of jury trials in equity procedure. I speak of the average characters of the two bars; exceptions no doubt exist; but if I were told of a leader in equity who must be watched lest he misstate the pleadings, the evidence, and the authorities to the Court,—who will, if he can and dare, disconcert and browbeat a junior, I should look certainly to find, in the weakness of the judge, some equivalent for the incompetency of a jury; but I should also expect to learn that the liar and bully of the Chancery bar (if such a character could be found there) carried the same practices into private life, and had suffered personal chastisement for his offences against the social proprieties as often as he ought to have undergone the rebuke of the Court for parallel professional delinquencies. Conduct so repugnant to the character of the tribunal and the usage of its bar, could only be attributed to an idiosyncrasy. But when we hear of the clever silencing of a "dangerous" witness at a trial, we censure the system rather than the individual. A thorough amendment of the system is not within the power of the bar; but something may be done by giving a greater elevation to at least the theory of professional morality.

* * An error will be found in the Leading Article of THE JURIST of last week. In reference to the observation on feigned issues out of Chancery, it should have been said, that the form remained until the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. The argument is of course untouched by this accidental omission.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 5, 1848.

It is with considerable gratification that we perceive that the correctness of the view taken by us upon the effect of the 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, is justified by the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench: we say the decision of the Court, because, first, practically, as the equal division of opinion of the Court prevents the application for a mandamus being granted, it is, in effect, a decision that the mandamus did not lie; and because, secondly, although the opinions of the judges were in the result equally divided, the reasoning of one of the learned judges who thought the rule ought to be made absolute shews, that he so thought on grounds quite separate from and leaving undetermined the construction of the statute of Henry. "I rest my judgment," Mr. Justice Coleridge is reported to have said, "on this narrow ground, that the applicants have laid such grounds before the Court as entitle them to a mandamus, in order that it may be demurred to or met by a return." And, again, in another part, where his Lordship comments upon the statute, "The examination of the statute may be ranged under four heads of inquiry, three of which relate to matters of fact, and the fourth to the construction of the statute. Time, however, forbids me to enter into them. But my opinion is, that upon each and all a case so strong is made as raises a belief in my mind that their case is true, and that no answer can be given to it. By the practice of this Court we have not required before granting this writ absolute certainty either in fact or in law; but if the matter of fact be made probable, we leave it to the jury to decide the fact, and we allow matters of law to remain on the record, in order that our decision may be reviewed by a higher tribunal. If it were a question of title which was to go to a jury, we should not require absolute certainty, especially when that title was to be traced down, as here, from remote ages through contested claims and foreign usurpation. If we refuse the rule, we prevent inquiry; we say there is nothing to inquire into, or that the matter is unimportant, whereas if we grant it, all we do is to say that enough has been done to shew that it is a case which deserves further inquiry."

It is quite evident from this, that the learned judge, not merely in form but in substance, declines to pronounce a decided opinion on the construction of the statute. The ground of his judgment is, that a case of doubt is raised sufficient for him to leave the question of construction to be decided on the demurrer or return to the mandamus. Whereas, in order to discharge the rule, the Court must have come to a clear and positive opinion that there was no doubt, and to such a clear and positive opinion Lord Denman and Mr. Justice Erle have come. The judgment of the latter learned judge proceeds entirely on the construction of the statute to be collected from the statute itself. "In support," he is reported to have said, "of the view of the objectors, various passages were cited from the canon law; and the form of citing opposers at confirmations, and the advantage of giving this power to the Archbishop and people were much relied upon; but these grounds are untenable. In the first place, the reception of evidence of extrinsic facts with a view to alter the received meaning of known words is not to be permitted: it would be doing violence to the statute, if not illegal; besides it does not appear to me that the alleged practice has been proved." And, after commenting upon several statutes, the learned judge proceeds:—"It is impossible, then, that the Parliament which so regarded the canon law should use the word 'confirm' in this statute not in its common sense but in a sense limited by the canon law." Lord Denman, admitting the gross absurdity of calling upon persons to appear and object, and then refusing to hear them when they do appear and tender their objections, says, "That these things are anomalies there can be no doubt; but they do not constitute a case for setting aside a clear and established rule founded on a distinct act of Parliament, and settled by invariable practice." Both these learned judges have, therefore, expressed a clear and decided opinion upon the construction of the statute, and could not, according to the practice, have holden for the discharge of the rule without committing gross injustice, unless their opinion had been clear. This being the state of things upon such an application, the judges who held for the discharge of the rule, being bound before they could so hold, to decide upon the construction of the statute, and having, in fact, expressed a clear opinion; while those learned judges who were for making the rule absolute, were only bound to doubt, and expressed, in fact, no more than doubt, we apprehend that this case of Reg. v. The Archbishop of Canterbury is an express authority, that, upon the true construction of the 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, the Archbishop has no judicial power to determine whether the confirmation of the appointment of a Bishop, duly elected, ought or ought not to take place, but is, for the purpose of the confirmation, simply of a ministerial officer, bound to confirm pursuant to the direction of the Crown. In other words, that the complete creation of a Bishop is, by law, entirely in the hands of the Crown. This is the view that we ventured to take upon this subject in a preceding paper in this Journal, (ante, p. 1), and we can, indeed, barely understand how it is possible for a lawyer to read the statute otherwise. Let it be recollected, that by the 5th section, the Crown is empowered to command the Archbishop to confirm the election of the Bishop; that, by the 7th, if he refuses, and does not confirm the election signified to him pursuant to the statute, within twenty days after it shall have been so signified, he is made liable to penalties. How is it possible that any practice or any rule of law not having the force of an act of Parliament, so as to override the rule inevitably flowing from these enactments of the 25 Hen. 8, can put a construction upon the word "confirm," which not only may, but almost of necessity must, compel the Archbishop to disobey the 7th section? How can any such rule or practice give a power to the Archbishop to suspend indefinitely a proceeding which it is criminal for him not to take within twenty days? Or, to put the objection in another form, how can it be contended that any practice or rule of the canon law, can make it the duty of the Archbishop to subject himself to penalties? It is quite plain, that if the Archbishop has the judicial power contended for, either it must be his duty to subject himself, or at least, to take proceedings which may, by their protraction, subject him to the penalties of the 7th section of the statute; or the 7th section is mere verbiage. We hardly think any lawyer could contend that that is the intention of an act of Parliament.

It has been, indeed, urged, by one of the learned judges, that the 7th clause is not, as to the limit of twenty days, peremptory, but means only that the Bishop shall confirm within that period if not hindered by lawful cause; and that a bonâ fide belief of the unfitness of the Bishop elect would be a lawful cause, as the illness of the Archbishop or of the Bishop elect would be. But we apprehend there is a great distinction between holding that the penalty imposed by a statute does not attach where the party made liable to it is rendered incapable of performing his duty by the act of God, or by some circumstance which is at any rate entirely dehors the statute, and reading a statute so as to import by construction into its very enactment a power to the person subjected to the penalty to neutralise the penal clause.

One ground taken by one of the two learned judges who were for supporting the rule is, that the statute having itself put no specific construction on the word "confirm," it must be taken to mean what it did before the act. No doubt it must; but the argument of the learned judge, if we may, with the greatest respect, venture to criticise it, does not appear to us to touch the question of the construction of that word. What he is reported to have said is this:—"If, when the statute was passed, the Archbishop had asked, How am I to confirm? the answer must have been, As you did before the act. His functions were the same before as after the act. If his duties were ministerial before, so they are now. If, before the statute, he was bound to examine at confirmation, so is he now; for it would require very strong words to deprive him of that right. No meaning is given to the word 'confirm;' and if the construction which has been contended for be correct, the Archbishop would be bound to confirm any one who might be elected, whether he were an heretic, infidel, bad liver, or disqualified by age or want of orders."

With the greatest deference we would venture to submit, that the learned judge is, in the first part of the argument, confounding the duties of the Archbishop, which, before the statute, were confirming and something more, with his duties after, which are described by the statute as simply confirming. In the proceedings taken by the Archbishop before the statute, he heard, or might hear, objections before confirming, because, as the law then stood, he was not to confirm, or, at least, was not bound to confirm, unless certain antecedent conditions were found to exist. But the hearing of the objections was clearly not the confirmation, although the confirmation might so immediately follow it as to make it a practice to call the whole proceedings "the confirmation." It may be quite true, therefore, that the Archbishop is to confirm now in the same manner as he did before the statute; but the argument of Mr. Justice Coleridge is, not that he is to confirm in the same manner as he did before, but that he is to be at liberty to abstain from confirming, as he might before the statute—a proposition which by no means follows, and which is directly opposed to at least the most natural meaning of the words used by the statute.

The latter part of the argument, which assumes that the construction of the statute contended for cannot be correct, because, if it were, the Archbishop would have to confirm an infidel, or a person otherwise absolutely and grossly disqualified, if such a person has been elected, requires to support it, that we should presume that which, we apprehend, we are not at liberty to presume, for the purpose of construing an act of Parliament, viz. that the Crown will grossly abuse its constitutional powers. We may presume that the Crown may be led into error, and may appoint a man whose doctrine may be matter of controversy, and may turn out to be unsound. We may find, as matter of history, that the Crown has scandalously abused its powers, and when we find such a fact we may be bound by it; but we are not at liberty to presume at all, and least of all for the sake of making an act of Parliament say more than its plain words express, that the Crown will command the Archbishop to confirm a person grossly and scandalously unfit for the sacred office, any more than, if the question were as to the Queen's supreme command of the army, we should be at liberty to presume that she would give the command of an army to a man known to be an abject coward. Moreover, as the Queen is the head of the Church, she has just as great an interest in avoiding error in the selection of her Bishop, as the Metropolitan could have.

One more observation on the policy of the law, and the dangers supposed to attend such a construction of the statute, and we will bring to a close remarks which have already exceeded our usual limits. Much has been said, both at the bar and in the judgments, of the mischief likely to result from the non-possession by the Metropolitan of the power of watching over the composition of the episcopal body. But this seems to have been entirely overlooked, that if the supreme power of appointment is vested in the Crown, there is a constitutional mode by which the people may restrain the abuse of that power. But if there were in the Metropolitan the power of imposing a veto, there would be no constitutional check upon abuse of that power. For in the former case, the minister of the Crown being responsible for his acts, the indirect check of adverse Parliamentary majorities, or, if necessary, the direct check of the right of impeachment vested in Parliament, would effectually, as well as constitutionally, operate upon the Crown on behalf of the people; while, in the latter case, it does not seem that there would be any legitimate course of proceeding to restrain or correct the Archbishop. And, we conceive, that if the legal question is to be looked at at all as one of convenience, it is far more convenient that the Crown should have the absolute power, subject to the constitutional power of correction residing in the people, by means of Parliament, than that the Metropolitan should possess the unlimited and uncontrolled power of putting a veto on the appointment of the Crown,—a power which would be, in effect, a power of appointing, subject to no constitutional check whatever.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—Stafford Baxter Somerville, of Doncaster, Yorkshire; John Thomas Duncalfe, of Walsall, Staffordshire; and John Brunton Falconer, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 12, 1848.

RECENT decisions in reference to that still fruitful theme, the rights and liabilities of members of railway companies, justify us in renewing the examination which we have been accustomed to make from time to time of this class of cases. The effect of signing the subscription deed has been much discussed, and this subject, from its importance, is entitled to priority of notice. In our remarks on Wontner v. Shairp, (11 Jur. 211, 373; 4 Railw. Cas. 542), which decided, that if the signature were obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, and such fraud had not been waived, the subscribing party was not bound, we observed, that in the absence of fraud the signing of such deed would probably be found to afford a defence to an action by an allottee for the recovery of deposits. This has since been so determined in Garwood v. Ede, (11 Jur. 912, and see observations thereon, Id. 459). There the allottee had paid the deposits, received the scrip, and signed the deed, which gave the committee power to carry on or to abandon the undertaking, and to pay expenses, &c. out of the money which should come to their hands. The scheme proved abortive: the company was dissolved under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, and there was no evidence of fraud. It was held, that the allottee could not recover the deposits, upon the ground that he had disposed of his own money by the deed, having thereby authorised the directors to apply it.

The same Court, (the Exchequer), a few days afterwards, decided, that a party who had paid the deposits and received the scrip, which contained these words, "The subscription agreement and Parliamentary contract having been signed by the person to whom the certificate is issued," had placed himself in the same position as if he had signed the Parliamentary contract, which, in fact, he had not signed. The scheme had failed, but there was no fraud in the case; and the question of the effect of the plaintiff's having received scrip in the above form was left to the jury, who found that he had entered into the same contract, as though he had signed the deed. (Clement v. Todd, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 31).

We have stated, that, in Garwood v. Ede, the affairs of the company had been wound up under the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, the act "to facilitate the dissolution of certain railway companies;" but this fact does not appear to have been relied upon, or even mentioned, in the argument, as in any way affecting the position of the parties, and it was not necessary to refer to it in the judgment, as the decision proceeded upon other grounds unfavourable to the plaintiff. The learned counsel for the defence, by their silence on this point, appear to have considered, that there was nothing in the objection, which, however, has been mooted, that the company, having been dissolved under this statute, and the plaintiff, therefore, having been in law a party to such dissolution, he could not afterwards complain that the scheme had proved abortive. The question certainly appears deserving of some consideration, though, in our own humble opinion, the dissolution of a company under this act would not have the effect of barring a party's right to the return of his deposits. The stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, was passed, as it professes on its face, simply in order to facilitate the dissolution of certain railway companies. The object was to obviate the common-law difficulties of putting an end to a partnership or company, and of getting rid of future liabilities, to which parties were exposed during the continuance of the joint character which they had assumed. It was to prevent needless expenses from being incurred, after it had become evident that the scheme could not be carried out with profit. It does not appear, that the statute was intended to interfere with any existing rights or liabilities, or such as would arise from the dissolution merely considered as a dissolution, and, therefore, as evidence of the undertaking having been abandoned. It is an enabling statute, giving a company leave to put an end to its joint existence, and to commit suicide according to act of Parliament. We can easily suppose cases in which the directors have, by gross mismanagement, brought the affairs of the company to such a condition, that the very best course to be pursued is to dissolve it as soon as possible; but it would be a hardship, if this course, to which the shareholders had been driven by the conduct of the directors, should afterwards be set up as a bar to the claims of such shareholders against the directors. This would be tantamount to telling the luckless members, that they must continue as a company, or suffer the loss of their deposits; and it would be allowing the directors to take advantage of the consequences of their own wrong. If, in an action for a recovery of deposits, it could be shewn that the company would probably have continued successfully, but for the winding of it up by the plaintiff and others, who insisted upon availing themselves of the provisions of the statute, the defence would probably be sufficient, but it would be so independently of the statute; and on the ground, that the plaintiff, having himself rendered the scheme abortive, could not afterwards complain of its having been so rendered.

The principle on which a party is allowed to recover his deposits, is failure of consideration: this equally exists whether the company be dissolved under the act or the undertaking be abandoned by any other means. A clear common-law right like this, can be taken away only by express words or necessary implication, and we cannot find proof of either in this statute.

The dissolution is to be taken to be the act of the whole company, (see sect. 24), but it will be seen the only parties entitled to vote are the scripholders, (sect. 12); and, therefore, the original allottees, who may have transferred their scrip at a loss, and who may still be liable for calls not yet paid up, may have their rights seriously affected by the acts of other parties, if it be held that a return of deposits cannot be claimed after such dissolution.

By sect. 13, the mere fact of attending the meeting is not to alter the rights or liabilities of the shareholders; and by sect. 25 the dissolution is not to affect the rights of creditors or other persons not shareholders. If it be said that these words imply, that voting at the meeting shall affect the shareholders, the answer seems to be, that such is not a necessary implication, and that the words in sect. 13 were probably introduced ex majori cautela, and to encourage the shareholders to meet and discuss the vital question of "to be or not to be," without prejudice.

In an action against an allottee for the deposits, which he has agreed to pay, it appears such dissolution would not be an answer. Such an action was recently brought, (Duke v. Dive, 16 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 234); and a plea by the defendant, that the plaintiffs and the company, without the consent of the defendant, abandoned their endeavours to form the company, was held bad on demurrer, upon the ground, that the defendant's breach of contract was prior to such abandonment.

THE COUNTY COURTS ACT AND THE 1 & 2 VICT. c. 74.

We understand, that, in some counties, the magistrates refuse to act under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, (the Small Tenements Act), under an idea that it is virtually repealed by the County Courts Act.

The latter act, by the 6th section, enacts, "that as soon as a court shall have been established in any district under this act, and also at the time mentioned in any such order, which shall have been made as aforesaid, for holding any of the courts mentioned in either of the said schedules, as a county court under this act, the several provisions and enactments of the said acts of Parliament of the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her Majesty, and of every other act of Parliament heretofore passed, so far as the same respectively relate to, or affect the jurisdiction and practice of, the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, or give jurisdiction to any other court or to any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, with respect to judgments or orders obtained in the court so established or ordered to be holden as a county court, shall be repealed."

This is the only repealing section of the act, and it does not, in terms, abolish any existing jurisdiction created by act of Parliament, except such as are county court jurisdictions, or jurisdictions affecting judgments obtained under county court jurisdictions. The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, is, therefore, clearly not repealed in terms.

The enactments of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, relating to the recovery of small tenements, (sects. 122 et seq.), are modelled upon those of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, and are, in fact, in all material particulars the same, except that they extend the subject of jurisdiction from a rental of 20% a year to one of 80% a year. But they do not in any manner in terms repeal, or mention, or refer to, the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. The only question, therefore, is, whether the mere giving of this jurisdiction to the county courts, abolishes that given by the Small Tenements Act to the magistrates.

It will be observed that it was necessary by express enactments to give jurisdiction to the county courts in the matter of recovering small tenements, because, without such express enactments, the proviso of the 58th section would have prevented the courts from having jurisdiction.

Now, it has never been heard, that a clear existing jurisdiction is taken away, simply because an act of Parliament gives to another tribunal a jurisdiction over the same matter, which without the act it would not have had. In equity, it has been more than once holden, that the giving a remedy by proceeding in another court, does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. (Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & My. 159; Coates v. The Clarence Railway Company, Id. 181). The principle is, that the Legislature does not mean to take away an old remedy, but to give an additional one; and we apprehend, that the same principle must apply to the present case, especially if we consider, that the intention of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as expressed in the preamble, is not to destroy any jurisdiction, but merely to improve and extend the operation of the old jurisdiction of county courts. Even the jurisdiction of the superior courts of record is not abolished by the act;—Any person may still, if he thinks fit, proceed in a superior court for a debt within the county courts' jurisdiction, the check upon his doing so being, not that the jurisdiction of the superior court is taken away, but that he can get no costs, even if he succeeds.

On the whole, we apprehend that there is no ground for contending, that the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, repeals the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, and that any person seeking to recover possession of a tenement who, in other respects, brings himself within the 1 & 2 Vict., may still require the justices in petty Sessions to adjudicate, notwithstanding the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

STAMP ON FURTHER SECURITY FOR MORTGAGE DEBT, WITH OTHER MATTER.

The correctness of the decision in Lant v. Peace (3 Nev. & P. 327; 8 Adol. & Ell. 248) has always been doubted. In two recent cases, the doctrine of that case was adopted and applied in a manner which conclusively demonstrates its unsoundness. We took the liberty of commenting on one of these cases (Humberston v. Jones, 11 Jur., part 1, p. 337, Q. B.) immediately after its appearance in our pages. (See 11 Jur., part 2, p. 175. The other case is reported in a very recent number. (Doe v. Crawley v. Gutteridge, 12 Jur., p. 51, Q. B.). It goes a little beyond its predecessors. As the general principle which we think was infringed by these cases has been lately recognised and affirmed by the Court of Common Pleas, (Rushbrooke v. Hood, 11 Jur. 931), and as the question is one of very great practical importance, with reference as well to past as to future transactions, (for the rule in Doe v. Gutteridge would exclude half the deeds of transfer in existence from being received in evidence), we venture again to discuss the question as one not concluded by authority.

The stat. 12 Ann. sess. 2, c. 9, s. 24, which imposed duties (since repealed) on indentures, leases, bonds, and deeds, has a provision that is still in force, that, where more than one of the matters or things thereby charged with any stamp duty shall be ingrossed on one piece of vellum, &c., the duties shall be charged on every one of such matters. The Courts have carried out the spirit of this enactment by holding, that, if one instrument is made to answer several distinct and unconnected purposes, it must bear a distinct stamp in respect of each. The only other express provisions for the case of several matters in the same instrument* are contained in the titles "Conveyance," "Bond," and "Mortgage" in the schedule to the general stamp act. Under the former title, it is provided, that, where any instrument operating as a conveyance on a sale shall operate also as a settlement of any other property, or shall also contain any other matter or thing besides what shall be incident to the sale and conveyance of the property sold, or relate to the title thereto, such instrument shall be charged, in addition to the duty to which it shall be liable as a conveyance on a sale, with such further stamp duty as any separate deed containing the other matter would have been charged with, exclusive of progressive duty. Under the same head it is provided, that, when copyholds are sold and assured by surrender, the deed of surrender shall be deemed the principal instrument, and any other instruments for completing the title shall be charged with the duty to which the same may be liable under any general or particular description thereof contained in the schedule. A deed of covenants, to accompany a surrender of copyholds, is, therefore, under this head, exempt from ad valorem duty, but charged with the ordinary duty on a deed. If it contain other matter wholly unconnected with the sale, it is clearly liable to a further stamp in respect of such matter. But in Rushbrooke v. Hood, where, on a sale of copyholds, two surrenders were executed, one to the use of a mortgagee, who advanced part of the purchase-money, and the other to the use of the purchaser, subject to the mortgage, and a deed of even date was executed by the vendor and purchaser, containing covenants for title by the vendor, and covenants and other mortgage clauses by the purchaser, it was properly held, that the whole of the matter contained in the deed related to one transaction, and, therefore, required but one stamp. In that case, there were two surrenders, one of which bore the ad valorem conveyance stamp, and the other the ad valorem mortgage stamp. The object might have been effected by one surrender, which, however, would have been liable to both duties, upon principle as well as by virtue of an express provision to that effect contained in the schedule to the Stamp Act, under the head "Mortgage." Wharton v. Wallon (9 Jur. 638) is at least shaken by this decision. So, in Doe v. Fereday, (11 Adol. & Ell. 27), Lord Denman said, "We find no provision in the act, except in cases of conveyance by way of sale, that, where a deed operates on several subject-matters in several ways, it shall have several stamps, and, in the absence of any such provision, we think that one stamp is sufficient."

Passing over the provision under the head "Bond," (which, however, if our space allowed, we could shew to have a strong bearing in favour of the general principle here contended for,) we come to the corresponding clause with respect to mortgages, which, after providing for the case just referred to of a mortgage and a conveyance by the same instrument, thus proceeds:—"And in all other cases where a mortgage or other instrument heretofore charged with the ad valorem duty on mortgage shall be contained in one and the same deed or writing with any other matter or thing, except what shall be incident to such mortgage or other instrument, such deed or writing shall be charged with the same duties (except the progressive duty) as such mortgage or other instrument and such other matter or thing would have been separately charged with, if contained in separate deeds or writings." A provision substantially the same as that with respect to conveyances above referred to, except that it is expressly confined to instruments charged with the ad valorem duty.

Under the same head of "Mortgages" is contained an "exemption from the said ad valorem duty on mortgages, &c., but not from any other duty to which the same may be liable," of instruments made for further assurance of any property already mortgaged or charged by any instrument which shall have paid the ad valorem duty, and also, of any instrument made as an additional or further security for money already secured by any instrument which shall have paid the ad valorem duty, so far as regards such money, in case such additional or further security shall be made by the same person or persons who made the original security. But if any further sum be added to the money already secured, or be thereby secured to any other person, the said ad valorem duty shall be charged in respect of such further sum.

In the same schedule a transfer of mortgage, not containing any further charge, was charged with a duty of 1*l.* 1*s.*; but if the instrument contained a security for a further sum, however small, it was charged with ad valorem duty on the old debt as well as on the new advance. This was repealed by the stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, s. 2, which re-imposed the duty of 1*l.* 1*s.* on transfers without further charge, and thus proceeded: "And if any further sum of money or stock shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured, the ad valorem duty on mortgages payable under the said recited acts respectively shall be charged only in respect of such further money or stock." Upon this it was decided that the ad valorem duty was not cumu-

* We need not here notice the provisions under the titles "Bond" and "Mortgage," that where the same instrument contains securities for the payment of a distinct sum to different persons, the ad valorem duty is to be separately charged in respect to each.

* See, in connexion with the proviso under the head "Bond," the heads "Declaration of Trust" and "Settlement."

lative, but in lieu of the transfer duty. So that a deed of transfer alone would require a stamp of 1*l.* 15*s.*, with 1*l.* 5*s.* progressive duty; but a deed of transfer with a further charge of 10*s.*, would require a stamp of 1*l.* only, with 1*l.* progressive duty. (Doe d. Bartley v. Gray, 4 Nev. & M. 719; 3 Adol. & Ell. 89). The lucid and able judgment delivered by Lord Denman, C. J., in this case, deserves attentive perusal. It is the only reported judgment on the subject of mortgage stamps which contains an accurate and comprehensive survey of the whole of the provisions in force on the subject. The decision was expressly founded on this ground, that under the repealed provision as to transfers contained in the general stamp act, the ad valorem duty was clearly not cumulative, and that the substituted provision in the 3 Geo. 4 was intended merely to reduce the amount of duty, but not to require two stamps instead of one. A different decision would have made the act, which is intitled "An Act to reduce" the stamp duties in certain cases, operate to increase them in some instances. Thus, if a mortgage for 50*l.* were transferred, and a further sum of 50*l.* secured by the same deed, this, under the repealed law, would have required a stamp of 1*l.* 10*s.*, with 1*l.* progressive duty; but, if the duty substituted by the 3 Geo. 4 were cumulative, the stamp on the first skin would be 2*l.* 15*s.*, and the progressive duty 1*l.* 5*s.*, or 1*l.*, no one can say which;—perhaps both. We are thus particular in considering this point, because it is important that the decision in Doe v. Gray should not be treated as questionable. It was confirmed indirectly by Lant v. Peace, and directly by Doe d. Barnes v. Roe (6 Scott, 525, and 4 Bing. 737) and Doe d. Bowman v. Lewis, (13 Mee. & W. 241).

We now come to Lant v. Peace, where a mortgagee for 400*l.* advanced to the mortgagor a further sum of 1000*l.*, and took a conveyance of other property as a further security for the old debt, as well as for the new advance. The stamps were sufficient to cover the ad valorem duty on the 1000*l.* and progressive duty; but it was held, that a deed stamp in respect of the further security was necessary, because the exemption in the stamp act of deeds of further security from ad valorem duty did not exempt them from any other duty to which the same might be liable. This decision appears to proceed upon an entire misconception of the object of the proviso in the exempting clause, which was evidently intended to prevent a deed or instrument operating solely as a further security from escaping liability to any duty whatever. In other words, it was intended to give to the mortgage clauses in the schedule the same operation which they would have had if the ad valorem duty had in the first instance been imposed only on "mortgages, &c., for securing any sum of money not previously secured by some instrument that shall have paid the ad valorem mortgage duty." If the duty had been imposed in those terms, the exempting clause would have been unnecessary, and then a deed of further security would, as a "deed not otherwise charged," have been liable to a deed stamp. To produce this effect was the sole object of the words at the head of the exempting clause. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that the exempting clause has no bearing whatever on the question decided in Lant v. Peace, which, however, was expressly decided on the wording of that clause. And it is as clear, that a deed, containing a further security for an old mortgage debt, and also a security for a fresh advance, is not a "deed not otherwise charged" within that title in the schedule. That it is not a deed containing a mortgage, and also other matter not incident to the mortgage, within the clause cited above is equally clear. If it is one transaction, each part of it is incident to the rest. Every thing, without which a mortgage would not be made, is incident to the mortgage. (See Wolsley v. Cox, 2

Q. B. Rep. 321; Doe v. Phillips, 11 Adol. & Ell. 796). And if a mortgagee refuses to make a further advance without having a better security for his old debt, that better security is plainly incident to the new mortgage. If, indeed, it is part of the arrangement that a lease, or a money settlement, or other matter subject to a special stamp duty, shall be executed, and this is included in the mortgage deed, the deed will be liable also to the appropriate stamp for a lease, settlement, &c., in addition to the mortgage stamp. But that is because the act expressly charges every instrument of lease, settlement, &c., without regard to its liability to any other stamp*. But it does not charge a deed as such, unless it is "not otherwise charged." The above cited case of Rushbrooke v. Hood goes precisely to this point.

In Brown v. Pegg, (8 Jur. 954; 6 Q. B. Rep. 1), a deed recited a mortgage, by demise of land belonging to A., to trustees for securing two several sums of 50*l.* and 50*l.* It recited a subsequent deed, under which B. (who, as trustee for A., had joined in the original mortgage) became beneficially entitled to the reversion. It then recited a further mortgage by B. to the trustees for securing another 50*l.*, and it contained a transfer of the existing mortgage securities, a further charge of 15*l.* advanced by the transferee, and a conveyance by B. of the fee-simple, as a further security for all the monies. It bore an ad valorem stamp of 1*l.* only. The Court held that the deed was inadmissible, as the further security required "a deed stamp at least" in addition, and they relied on Lant v. Peace. As the further security was not by the original mortgagor, the additional stamp that was required was an ad valorem stamp. The case, therefore, is of no weight as a confirmation of Lant v. Peace.

In Humberston v. Jones, a mortgage in fee for 1000*l.* was transferred; and, by the same deed, a further sum of 1723*l.* was secured by the mortgagor's heir to the transferee, and a power of sale was given to him by the heir as a security for the old debt as well as for the new one, the heir covenanting to pay both. The Court said, that this was a further security requiring a stamp beyond the ad valorem stamp on the first advance; and relied on Brown v. Pegg.

The Court did not say what further stamp was requisite; but if there was a further mortgage security the stamp should have been an ad valorem one, the security not being by the original mortgagor. Now, it was clearly no mortgage security, because the lands were already mortgaged in fee: it was merely a further power of dealing with an existing security. If the Court meant that the power of sale was chargeable with the deed stamp as matter not incident to the mortgage, the observations we are about to make on Doe v. Gutteridge will apply. Lant v. Peace, and Brown v. Pegg, in each of which there was a further mortgage security, were certainly not in point.

All the cases above referred appear to have been decided with reference to the clause of exemption from ad valorem mortgage duty. In Doe v. Gutteridge, the Court relied on those cases, and also used the expression "additional security," apparently, therefore, relying on the same clause, within which, however, that case at least most unquestionably did not come. There an estate in mortgage for a term to secure 150*l.* had been devised by the mortgagor to his widow for life, with remainder to his son in fee. The devisees joined in a transfer of the mortgage, in which was contained a further charge of 200*l.*, and a covenant by the devisees to pay the entire sum of 350*l.*, but no further mortgage security for the old debt. The Court held, that an ad valorem stamp on the further charge was insufficient. Lord Denman said:—"Without adverting to the cases,

* But as to settlements, see the express exemption under the title "Settlement."

I am of opinion that the stamp on this deed is insufficient. The parties to whom the further sum is advanced, by their covenant, take upon themselves a new mode of liability; and it is the same with reference to this objection as if a new party had been introduced, covenanting for himself, his executors, and administrators." Pattenon, J.—"That is certainly so. A personal liability of two persons is introduced by this deed, not merely in respect of the further sum advanced, but in respect also of the original sum, and not merely in respect of the assets of the testator, whether real or personal. [We presume that the learned judge does not mean here to say, that a covenant in a mortgage deed is a mortgage of the covenantor's assets.] In this deed an additional security is given, which brings the case within Brown v. Pegg, and Humberston v. Jones."

As the additional security was not a mortgage of anything, or, if it was a mortgage, was not given by the same person who made the original security, it is plain that the clause of exemption from ad valorem mortgage duty had nothing to do with the question, and that the cases of Lant v. Peace, Brown v. Pegg, and Humberston v. Jones, which were expressly decided with reference to that clause, were not in point. In Doe v. Roe, there was a fresh covenant by the mortgagor to surrender the copyholds which formed the security, and no doubt also a fresh covenant by the mortgagor to pay the old debt; but it was held, that no deed stamp was requisite. And Pattenon, J., in the case before us, expressly recognised the authority of Doe v. Roe. Doe v. Gutteridge therefore is contrary to Doe v. Roe, and must rest, if on anything, on the clause relating to an instrument of mortgage with other matter not incident to the mortgage. Now, suppose that a party is willing to advance money on the security of an estate already in mortgage, provided the payment of the old debt, and consequently the exoneration of the estate which is to form his security, is further secured by the covenant of a surety, can it be pretended that the covenant which is thus to fortify the new mortgage is not matter incident to that mortgage? This is exactly the case of Doe v. Gutteridge. Again, in all the cases the further charge has been contained in the same deed with a transfer of the original mortgage. Now, whatever may be thought of the relevancy of a better security for the old debt to a fresh charge, it is undeniable that a better security must be an essential part of a transfer, if the proposed transferee is dissatisfied with the old security. In this view, the transaction in each of the cases subsequent to Lant v. Peace consisted of a mortgage for a fresh loan, a transfer of an old mortgage, and a further security for the old debt, i.e. of a mortgage and a transfer with matter incident to the transfer, an ad valorem stamp being payable for the mortgage, and the transfer with its incidents being by express enactment (as interpreted in Doe v. Gray and Doe v. Roe) exempted from any stamp duty. The concurrence of the mortgagor in a transfer for the purpose of covenanting directly with the transferee for payment of the debt, instead of leaving him to his circuitous remedy by action in the name of the original mortgagee, is, if there can be degrees of certainty, still more certainly matter incident to the transfer.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, Feb. 10.

Mr. Baines obtained leave to bring in "A Bill for amending the Procedure in respect of Orders for the Removal of Poor Persons in England and Wales, and Appeals therefrom." The following are the principal features of the Bill, which recites that much useless and expensive litigation upon points of mere form has taken place under the present law, so that few appeals against such orders are now decided upon the merits.

1. Instead of a copy of the examination the removing parish is to send a statement of the grounds of removal, and to be confined at the trial of the appeal to the grounds set forth and specified in such statement.

2. The sessions are empowered to amend the statements of grounds of removal and grounds of appeal, (in analogy to the power given to courts of record in civil cases by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 23). The amendment to be upon such terms as to payment of costs, or postponement of the trial, or both, as the sessions shall deem reasonable and just.

3. A power is given to amend the order itself, more extensive than that given by the 5 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, though so as to carry out what Lord Kenyon, in Res v. Chilverscolton, (8 T. R. 178), declared to have been, in his opinion, the original intention of that act.

4. Orders already quashed for any defect in the notice of chargeability on the examination are to be deemed and taken in any proceeding hereafter to have been quashed for defect of form, and not upon the merits, unless the contrary shall have been already adjudged between the same parties.

5. The decisions of the sessions as to granting or refusing amendments, and as to the sufficiency of the statements of grounds of removal or appeal, are to be final, except where they think fit to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench.

6. The removing parish is to be enabled to abandon the order at any time, whether before or after the entry of an appeal; costs of the other parish to be taxed by the taxing officer of sessions, either in or out of sessions, and recoverable like costs under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76.

SPETTIGUE & FARRANCE, Law Booksellers and Publishers, 67, Chancery-lane, London, respectfully invite the attention of the Profession to the following LAW BOOKS, which they have recently published, and which can be had by order of every Bookseller in the Kingdom, or direct from the Publishers.

The LAWYER'S COMPANION, price 5s., continued annually. * * In bringing this Work fully before the Profession, the Publishers have spared neither trouble nor expense, and they trust that a liberal Profession will appreciate their exertions, and encourage the undertaking. A Work of this kind has long been wanted, but its great labour has hitherto rendered all attempts to accomplish it abortive.

The Publishers are bold to assert, however, that regard being had to the difficulties of preparing a Work of this kind for the first year, they have accomplished more than could be reasonably expected. A few names in the Country List of Attorneys may have been omitted, notwithstanding all the care bestowed to avoid it; but the Country List is only as one-tenth to the whole; and supposing that List to be somewhat imperfect, it can only in a very small degree detract from the excellence of the whole, the Original Articles in which are confessedly the best and most useful that ever appeared in a Work of the same character. A glance at the CONTENTS will shew what has been done to make the Work worthy of the encouragement of every Practical Gentleman of the Profession. It contains—

LONDON, FEBRUARY 19, 1848.

THE discretion of counsel to bind their clients has lately been called in question, we apprehend, without due consideration. In practice, it does not often occur that there is any occasion for counsel to exercise his discretion in opposition either to the wishes of the attorney who instructs him, or of the party who instructs the attorney. In general, where a sound and proper relation subsists between the party and his attorney, and between the attorney and counsel, both party and attorney place that degree of confidence in the counsel which will induce them to acquiesce in what he advises; and on the other hand, in most cases, the circumstances are such, that if the counsel cannot induce his clients to acquiesce in the course advised by him, he may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, in the second degree, endeavour to obtain for his clients that which they think for their interest.

Cases, however, of a very different character may sometimes occur, in which there is but one course which counsel, in the exercise of his best judgment, can advise his client to pursue. And then comes the question whether his duty is not to adopt that course, even if it should be opposed to the wish of his client.

We believe there is no very settled opinion at the Bar whether the authority entrusted to counsel, when a cause is committed to his hands, goes the whole length of placing it in his discretion to conduct the case absolutely as he in his judgment thinks best for his client; so that, if on a material step the client's wish is opposed to his opinion, he ought to act on his own opinion in opposition to the wish of the client. But that this must be the extent of the authority entrusted to counsel will, we think, be apparent upon consideration. For what the client does when he gives a brief, is not to retain the counsel merely to attend the hearing of the cause, and to be, as it were, fed with instructions from time to time during the trial; but he instructs his counsel generally to conduct the case on behalf of the particular party. We imagine an attorney would be somewhat surprised if his counsel were to be perpetually leaning over the table and asking him step by step whether he should examine this witness, or press this particular point, or make or refuse to make this or that particular admission. We imagine that an attorney so harassed would be apt to say, mentally if not overtly, "Sir, I retained you to judge for me what should be said or left unsaid; not merely to say by your mouth what the party could have said at less expense with his own." It is undoubtedly not the practice in general for counsel to make any material admission, or to consent to any terms of compromise, without consulting with their clients; but that is because in general the question of compromise depends upon facts more within the knowledge of the attorney than of the counsel. But where the circumstances are such that the counsel is in possession of all the facts, and all that has to be determined is, whether to compromise is more for the interest of the client than to fight, then we conceive that it is not only within the province of the counsel, but his bounden duty to make terms for his client, even though the client may not wish it, or to retire from the conduct of the cause.

The extent to which the Courts hold parties bound by the acts of their counsel does not seem quite settled. It is quite clear, that what counsel do, either in the absence of their clients, or in their presence without objection, binds the client. This appears from the following passage in an esteemed work on evidence*, and the cases there cited:—

"For the purposes of the suit," says Mr. Gresley,

p. 350, "an admission made by counsel is conclusive; and in subsequent proceedings, or on a re-hearing, if the Court is satisfied that they were really made, cannot be retracted. The party's remedy is against his counsel. (Bradish v. Gee, Amb. 229). As, however, they are usually proved by no more satisfactory testimony than the memory of the adverse counsel or the notes which he has made at the back of his brief, their exact force and form are constant subjects of dispute. In a case at common law, Lord Chief Justice Best seems to have thought that, on a new trial, the admissions of the counsel at the former one could not be proved unless the party was himself in court, because the counsel was not the party's agent. Mr. Justice Burrough said, 'Parties are every day bound by the acts and declarations of their counsel; if the plaintiff was in court, heard what his counsel said, and made no objection, I think he is bound.' (Colledge v. Horn, 3 Bing. 122). In one case, Mr. Bickersteth having said, 'The bench at the quarter sessions recommended a settlement of the disputes and differences between the parties. An arrangement was accordingly made and reduced into writing, and signed by counsel, and it is sworn that the defendant was present, we have only to prove that he consented.' Sir John Leach, M. R., interposed, 'You have not so much to do, for, it being proved to have been signed by counsel on both sides, it is for the defendant to disprove it.' Mr. Knight, arguing contra, the Master of the Rolls said, 'The only question is, whether the counsel had sufficient authority. In the absence of evidence, the Court will conclude that he had authority, for it is not to be presumed that counsel would enter into an agreement without authority.'" (Elworthy v. Bird, Taml. 43).

It is clear, that, as between counsel and attorney, the Court in general is inclined to check interference by the attorney in the conduct of the suit, except through his counsel. But, we conceive, that the authority given by the attorney to the counsel is at any time revocable, and, therefore, that if the attorney is so opposed to the course taken by his counsel as to choose to withdraw the case from his hands, he may do so.

Whether, under such circumstances, the Court will disturb the course of business, and in mercy to the party, give him time to instruct other counsel, must, of course, be a matter in the discretion of the Court. But it is manifest that such an interference with the functions of counsel can very rarely be requisite, and that anything like a frequent adoption of it would be most inconvenient for the transaction of business.

SANATORY* LEGISLATION.

The Principles and Practical Efficiency of the Common and Statute Law of England, in Relation to the Promotion of, and Removal of Causes injurious to Public Health. By J. TOULMIN SMITH, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Special Pleader. 12mo., pp. 147.

[Shaw & Sons.]

The appearance of this work is most opportune. At a time when it is proposed to add largely to the Statute

Law already in existence on this subject, it is extremely important that some accurate knowledge should be possessed by the Legislature of the law as it actually exists,—a knowledge which on all subjects would prevent much blundering and mischievous legislation, and which, in the present instance, Mr. Toulmin Smith has here presented in a condensed shape, with so much learning, clearness, and ability, that we earnestly hope this little book will find its way into the hands of at least every member whose vote shall help to determine the fate of Lord Morpeth's Bill. As, however, the best safeguard against ignorance in the Legislators is knowledge in those who make the Legislators, Mr. Smith has, as he informs us in his preface, endeavoured to divest his pages so far of technicalities as to adapt them to the general reader.

The following is the division of Mr. Smith's work:—Chapter I.—Of Nuisances at Common Law. Chapter II.—Of Nuisances enumerated in and affected by various Statutes. Chapter III.—Of the Office and Duties of Coroners; and of Burial. Chapter IV.—Of the Office and Jurisdiction of Commissioners of Sewers. Chapter V.—Of Drainage properly so called. Chapter VI.—Of the Supply of Water. Chapter VII.—Of the proposed Measures of Government.

One of the most curious investigations is that contained in the chapter on the commissioners of sewers, in which the author shews that commissions of sewers have no connexion whatever with drainage properly so called, the sole object of their constitution being the preservation of the land from inundation of the sea, which object was, at a later period, extended to the overflow of certain navigable fresh-water streams also. "The word 'sewer' itself," observes Mr. Smith "is alone sufficient to shew the nature of the office created by commissioners of sewers. Sewer is a Saxon word, see-war, that is, sea-fence, protection against the sea, whatever its construction." (p. 67). He afterwards, (p. 92), after citing the following words of a statute of Charles II., "The breadth of eight yards from the hores and brinks of the ditches on either side," observes in a note: "This shews that the word shore is not a corruption of sewer, as is often said, but that it was used in reference to the margin of the ditch which lay on the road side, and carried off the filth. Being the sloping margin of the road, the word came to be used instead of the ditch itself. Hence the term 'common shore' often used, means really the drain which bounds the road." We have an instance of the conjunction of the two words in the name "Shoreditch;" respecting which we are tempted to mention the following piece of antiquarianism. In a note in Kelham's Translation of Britton, p. 94, there is given an ancient roll, never before published:—15th year of King John, Roll 20. "Hereward de Shore Ditch imprisoned for the murder of Stephen de Litchington is suspected but denies it, therefore let him clear himself by water ordeal. He did clear himself, and abjured the realm." This proves, first, that the name Shoreditch did not come, as sometimes asserted, from Jane Shore; secondly, that at that time (King John) the ordeal was not considered sufficient acquittal.

But the value of Mr. Smith's book is not of an antiquarian but of a strictly and eminently practical character; and the valuable practical conclusion to be mission, and the Health of Towns' Association, in their report, spell it as above. The compounds from 'sano' are generally used in English in reference to the mind. Any form of the word is bad therefore, as applied physically, in our language. But 'sanity' is always applied to the mind, (it was also then employed by Cicero), while 'a sanative' is sometimes used for a physical remedy, (so 'sanatio' by Cicero). Hence, it is clear, that 'sanatory' is the only admissible form of the word, if it be used at all; and against that use it would now be vain to protest." Preface, p. 1.

* On the spelling of this word the author has the following note:—"As a new mode of spelling this word has lately been adopted, a remark on the subject is proper. The First Com-gathered from the book and the preface together is this, "That the law of England, as it now exists, offers the efficient means, to all men who are in earnest, for working out practical sanitary improvement." From the paragraphs artfully prepared and industriously circulated respecting the "approach of the cholera," the wonderful discoveries of the sanitary commissioners, and the miraculous efficacy of the application of the powers of the new commission of sewers, some persons became possessed with the fancy that their only hope of salvation lay in sending immediately for the sewer commissioners. We infer, from the author's preface, that he was led by some such cause both to act and to write on this occasion. "The following pages," he says, "owe their immediate appearance to the following circumstances:—In the first weeks of the present year the author was placed upon a committee in one of the Metropolitan suburbs for inquiring into the sanitary condition of the place, with a view to its improvement. Certain novel and theoretical plans having been urged, and been, indeed, the special object of the formation of that committee, the author strenuously urged, in opposition to these, that, in all such cases, the true and only proper and effective course was to put in action those constitutional, regular, and legal means which the law affords. Having endeavoured briefly to point out those means, and having succeeded in practically carrying out the ideas with which he first came forward, it was strongly urged on him that those were matters which it would be useful to make more generally known." He afterwards, page 44, note, thus states the course he followed and the result:—"He caused extracts from various statutes to be printed, circulated, and conspicuously posted up, so that the law might be known. He further called on the police in his district to fulfil their duties. The effect, in a few days, was extraordinary; nuisances of long standing, and which were declared by those who had levied them to be incapable of removal, were removed in a few hours."

On the objections to the proposed Government measure connected with the system of centralization, Mr. Smith has the following observations, which, together with many more to the same effect, for which we have not room, are deserving of the most attentive consideration at the present time:—

"When one general law is established, and every local act abolished, every inhabitant of every town may know, and will know, his rights; and every executive officer will not only know his duties, but know that there are on every side of him other towns in which a similar law is working, and which his neighbours will be ready enough to hold up before him, if he does not exert his energies. It will be the interest as well as the duty of every corporate body to strive to the uttermost to discharge faithfully the duties of its office; and one body in each place having in its hands the management of all the so nearly connected matters of lighting, paving, cleansing, watering, and draining, &c., there will be no clashing of interests to obstruct their free discharge. But this measure proposes to deaden every such feeling of generous emulation, to destroy every effort at improvement, and to damp every ardour for progressive development of resources. Every town and district throughout England is literally to be tied to the apron-string of a commission of four men sitting in London, as to all matters connected with the everyday welfare and enjoyment of life. Not a town-council can move hand or foot, improve their town, or carry out any public work, but as and how this commission shall be pleased to allow. The proposition is really monstrous, the more monstrous in that there is not the slightest plea of necessity for any such scheme.

"Not only will all local responsibility and self-reliance, which it has ever been the wise policy of English law to encourage, be thus deadened and destroyed, but the spirit of enterprise, already sufficiently depressed by excise and other laws, will find no field for exertion in one of the most extensive and important departments in which it can be developed. It is obvious, that, in all such bodies, be they called commissions or otherwise, the practical working must, and does, always rest with one or two persons generally unseen by the public, and wholly irresponsible. Such is a necessary result. Instead, then, of a stimulus being given to enterprise and to talent in the contrivance of the best public works, and the devising of continual improvements, the theories and crotchets of one or two individuals will, by such a centralized system, be imposed upon all England as compulsory law; every scheme, however excellent, which does not conform to such theories and crotchets being absolutely forbidden. It cannot be necessary to dwell upon this point. That it will be the inevitable result of any central human board, every one must perceive, and its inevitable evils cannot be too strongly represented. Were it not so, however, the assumption that a board in London can, by itself or its instruments, know the wants and the means of a distant town better than the inhabitants of that town, is too preposterous to need a word of comment." (pp. 126, 127).

In lieu of this central commission, with its expensive machinery and cumbrous ramifications, Mr. Toulmin Smith suggests a measure which, besides the great recommendation of being much less expensive, has the advantage of interfering much less with that most important characteristic of the English institutions—the people's management of their own affairs:—

"All that can be needed of any supervision by any Government authority is the means of compelling the enforcement of the general law if, and where, it is neglected. Now this might be very simply effected by a very different, but unobjectionable and constitutional, machinery. While these sheets are passing through the press, a proposition of Earl Grey's has appeared for an additional under-secretary for the Colonies. If that step can be taken in one department, there can be no difficulty in appointing an additional under-secretary for the Home Department, to whom all matters relating to public health and education should be committed, and who should always have a seat in the House of Commons. This would be a trifling expense. The expense of the commission and all its machinery will be a very great burthen on the people. To such under-secretary, it might be made the duty of the authorities in every place to send annual returns on certain specified heads, and also plans and specifications of every public work proposed, as well as general plans of each place. It should be made competent for the under-secretary, if at any time those returns were unsatisfactory, or those plans were obviously defective, to instruct the Attorney-General to take proper measures in the Court of Queen's Bench to compel the execution of proper works in the one case, and in the other to restrain from the carrying out of inefficient ones. This would afford the opportunity for the question of the fulfilment or not of the duties required by law, and of the efficiency or not of the works, to be fairly, fully, and openly tried; and such a constitution might be given to the jury who should try it, that their verdict would carry influence and weight." (pp. 128, 129).

A sufficient warning against further submission to swathes and go-carts of the kind provided by Lord Morpeth's bill, (with the best intentions on the part of its noble promoter, we admit), ought to be found in the working results of that preposterous piece of legislation and fertile parent of jobs, the Metropolitan Buildings Act, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 84), which has imposed an enormous tax upon the district over which it extends, has occasioned the most serious inconvenience to all parties concerned, (except the surveyors, who have made, as they express it, a very good thing of their appointments), and has been honoured since it came into operation by the fall of more buildings newly erected, or in course of erection, than had ever before been known to fall during an equal space of time in the same district.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where, by an act of Parliament, a company were empowered to take certain lands for the purpose of forming a pier, for which the company were to make compensation to the owners; and the act provided, that on payment of the purchase-money to the owner, or, if he should "not be able to make a good title," then into the Bank of England, the lands should forthwith vest in the company. The company refusing to complete the purchase, because the title was unsatisfactory, on application for a mandamus to them, to pay the purchase-money to the person claiming to be owner, or into the Bank of England, the Court granted the writ, it appearing that he had endeavoured to obtain a complete title, but could not. (Reg. v. The Deptford Pier Company, 8 Adol. & Ell. 910). Where power is given to a company to take lands, upon giving notice to the occupier that they would be required for the purpose of their works, after such notice given they cannot withdraw it, and the Court will compel them to summon a jury to assess the compensation to the owner, although they may have offered to pay all reasonable costs incurred in consequence of their notice. (Reg. v. Hungerford Market Company, 4 B. & Ad. 327; see Reg. v. The Commissioners for improving Market-street, Manchester, Id. 393). And, where a dock company were incorporated by act of Parliament, which directed, that all actions against the company should be prosecuted against the treasurer or a director for the time being; but that the body or goods, lands, &c., of such treasurer or director should not, by reason of his being defendant in such action, be liable to execution. An action having been brought against the treasurer, and by the treasurer against the plaintiff in the suit, all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator, who made an award in both cases against the company, and awarded them to pay a certain sum. The Court granted a mandamus to the treasurer and directors to pay the amount so awarded. Reg. v. The St. Katherine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Ald. 360). So, where a dock company were required to make and maintain a new channel with equal depth and breadth at the bottom, and with equal inclination of the sides to the former channel, the Court granted a mandamus to compel the company to repair, although there might be another remedy by indictment. (Reg. v. The Bristol Dock Company, 1 G. & D. 287; S. C., 2 Adol. & Ell., N. C., 64; Reg. v. The St. Katherine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Ald. 360; Reg. v. The Victoria Park Company, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. C., 288). So, where a railway company had encroached upon the turnpike road, the Court granted a mandamus to restore the road according to the provisions of the act. (Reg. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 2 Railw. Cas. 694). It may be laid down as an invariable rule, that whenever there is an act of Parliament constituting a public company, whether railway, dock, or canal company, and they refuse to comply with the provisions of their respective acts of Parliament by which they are regulated, the Court of Queen's Bench will compel them by mandamus, if there is no other sufficient and effectual remedy. (Reg. v.

The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Adol. & Ell. 531; Reg. v. The Severn and Wyre Railway Company, 2 B. & A. 646; Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. C., 569; Reg. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. C. 47; Reg. v. The Bristol Dock Company, 2 Adol. & Ell. N. C., 64; Reg. v. The Thames and Isis Navigation Company, 5 Adol. & Ell. 804; R. v. The Staniford and Headby Canal Company, 1 M. & S. 32; Ex parte Home, 7 B. & C. 632; Reg. v. The Wilts and Berks Canal Company, 3 Adol. & Ell. 477; R. v. The Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal Company, 3 Adol. & Ell. 217). So, the Court has granted a mandamus to restore the treasurer of the company of the New Waterworks. (Reg. v. The Governors of New Waterworks, 1 Lev. 123; S. C., 1 Sid. 169). To swear in the director of an insurance company. (Anon., 1 Stra. 69; see Reg. v. The London Assurance Company, 5 B. & A. 899; Anon., 2 Ld. Raym. 989). To a clerk of a company to deliver up all the books that he held of the company. (Reg. v. Wildman, 2 Stra. 879). To admit a quaker, upon his affirmation, he having refused to take the oath prescribed by law, into the freedom of the Turkey Company. (Reg. v. The Turkey Company, 2 Burr. 934, 1000). To the Scriveners' Company, admit one to practise as a notary; but this only where the person has served such an apprenticeship as the act requires. (Reg. v. The Scriveners' Company, 10 B. & C. 511; see 41 Geo. 3, c. 79; Reg. v. The Scriveners' Company, 11 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 59).

If by law any public duty required to be performed in this country by the East India Company is refused on their part, the Court will in like manner, as in other public companies, enforce obedience by writ of mandamus, if there is no other specific remedy. Thus, where a dispatch was submitted by the directors of the company to the Board of Control, who altered it, and the directors refused to transmit it to India, the Court of Queen's Bench awarded a mandamus to compel them. (Reg. v. The East India Company, 1 Nev. & M. 335; 4 B. & Adol. 530; Ib., 4 M. & S. 279; Id. 330).

The Court will in every case where a mandamus is applied for, as we have before seen, exercise a discretion whether it is fit and proper that they should interfere by mandamus, or that the parties should be left to another remedy. We will now consider some of these cases in which they have declined granting this writ. Thus, where certain persons, being carriers, applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to compel a railway company to carry goods along their line of road, there being no clause in their act of incorporation requiring them to carry all goods offered for conveyance, and the company refused, although they had agreed with certain other persons, carriers, to carry their goods to the exclusion of others, the Court of Queen's Bench refused to grant the writ. Patteson, J. in delivering judgment, said, "A mandamus, if granted at all, must be to do something which the company are required to do by the act of Parliament, not something which they are required to do by the general law of the land. Now, it is admitted, that there is no clause in the act requiring the company to take the goods of all persons who present them for conveyance in the carriages of the company; and, indeed, the act seems rather to negative such an obligation. The 171st section* authorises all persons to use the railway, with carriages properly constructed, on payment of certain rates; and it seems, therefore, that the present applicants may make carriages of their own, and may require the company to allow them to be carried along the railroad. By the 174th section*, the company are empowered and required to provide locomotive engines or other power for drawing things along the railway, and may recover such sums of money for the use of them as they think proper, in addition to the other rates authorised to be taken. It seems, therefore, that it was not intended by the act to compel the company to take all goods of all persons which might be offered to be conveyed." (Ex parte Robins, 7 Dowl. P. C. 566). So, where an act of Parliament for constructing a railway company enacted that no locomotive or other engine, or other description of moving power, should at any time be brought upon or used on the line, unless it should have been approved of by the company, and required them, within fourteen days after notice to them by any person desirous of bringing any engine on the railway, to cause their engineer or other agent to inspect and examine such engine, at any place within five miles of the railway, and to report thereon to the company, when, if approved of by the engineer, the company should give a certificate to the party of their approval; on the return to the writ coming before the Court on demurrer for the insufficiency of the return, the Court held the writ would not lie, because it called on the company to grant their certificate and approval before the engineer had granted his, which was in opposition to the spirit of the act. (Reg. v. South Eastern Railway Company, 8 Law Journ., N. S., 285).

* 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 36. It is enacted, That all persons shall have free liberty to pass along and upon, and to use and employ the said railway with carriages properly constructed, as by this act directed, upon payment only of such rates and tolls as shall be demanded by the said company, not exceeding the respective rates or tolls by this act authorised, and subject to the rules and regulations which shall from time to time be made by the said company, or by the directors, by virtue of the powers to them respectively by this act granted:

Where a railway company took some portion of a person's land, and constructed part of the railway on it, and damaged the remainder of his property which adjoined, and then, two years afterwards, after an apparent delay on the part of the company in giving compensation, and summoning a jury to assess compensation, they stated that they were about to do more works, which would further injure the property, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to compel the company to summon a jury to assess the damages, it appearing that the company were acting bonâ fide, and that additional works were in progress. (Ex parte Parkes, 9 Dow, 614; see also Reg. v. The Wiltshire Canal Company, 8 Dow, 623). Where a mandamus was applied for to compel a company to issue their warrant to summon a compensation jury, by agreement between the parties merely, with a view to obtain the opinion of the Court whether, on the construction of the act, the proceeding by mandamus was the proper remedy, the Court stopped the argument, there being no question bonâ fide in contest. (Reg. v. The Blackwall Railway Company, 9 Dowl. P. C. 558). So where, by a railway act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 29, the sheriff was ordered to summon a jury to award compensation for loss sustained by any person through whose lands the railway might pass; and it enacted, that "the verdict and judgment thereon should be binding and conclusive to all intents and purposes." The under-sheriff, it was alleged, excluded from the jury the question as to damages done by the carts, considering it was not a subject for inquiry under the precept. After the judgment was entered, an application was made for a mandamus to the company to issue another precept to the sheriff, in order that the damages might be assessed on this part of the claim. The Court, however, refused the writ; and in delivering judgment said—"The verdict is said to be grossly under the mark, and the plaintiff seeks for this rule on two grounds: first, that the sheriff excluded one ground of damages which ought to have been submitted to the jury; secondly, that the defendant's witnesses proved that a greater amount of damages had been sustained than the jury gave their verdict for. It is admitted that a direct motion for a new trial could not succeed, because the 29th section of the act makes the verdict of the jury final and conclusive; but it was said that this Court might direct a second precept: that would be doing indirectly what this Court cannot do directly." (Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 12 Law Journ., Q. B., 271). Where an act of Parliament for constructing a railway gave power to the company to divert or alter the course of any roads*, the company, in execution of their powers, constructed a viaduct over the turnpike road, and made various other alterations: after completion, the trustees applied for a mandamus to compel the company to execute them in a different manner. No demand having been made on the company previous to applying for the writ by the trustees, requiring them to execute the works as the trustees deemed in conformity with the act, nor anything shewn amounting to a refusal on the part of the company, although the surveyors from time to time during the progress of the work expressed their dissatisfaction of the mode in which the company were proceeding, the Court refused to grant a mandamus. (Reg. v. The Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 12 Law Journ., Q. B., 106).

* Sect. 174. That it shall be lawful for the said company, and they are hereby empowered to provide locomotive engines or other power for the drawing or propelling of any articles, matters, or things, persons, cattle, or animals, upon the said railway, and to receive, demand, and recover such sums of money for the use of such engines, or other power, as the said company shall think proper, in addition to the several other rates, tolls, or sums by this act authorised to be taken.

Where a canal company was authorised by an act of Parliament to purchase lands necessary for the navigation, and were required to enrol the conveyances of such purchased lands with the clerk of the peace, copies whereof were to be good evidence in all courts. After a lapse of sixty-five years from the time of purchase of certain lands, during which time no application had been made to the company to enrol conveyances, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to compel them. (Reg. v. The Leeds Canal Company, 11 Adol. & Ell. 316; S. C., 3 Per. & D. 174; and see R. v. Staniforth, 1 M. & S. 32; Reg. v. The Commissioners of Cockermouth, 1 B. & Adol. 378, 386).

Where, by an act of Parliament (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 30), a company was established, with powers to make calls, and to sue and be sued in the name of their treasurer or any director; and an action was brought against the treasurer, and judgment entered up against the company, who appeared to have no assets, the Court refused to grant a mandamus commanding the company to pay the sum recovered and costs. (Reg. v. The Victoria Park Company, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 288; see Reg. v. The St. Katherine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Adol. 360). So, the Court refused to issue a mandamus requiring the company to make calls to enable them to satisfy the debt, it appearing that calls sufficient to satisfy the judgment had been made, but not paid, and that the company had not now the proper officers for making such calls. (Reg. v. The Victoria Park Co., supra). Quere, whether, if these circumstances had not appeared, a mandamus would have gone commanding the company to make the calls?) The Court will not grant a mandamus to a private trading company to compel a transfer of stock, standing in their books in the name of a bankrupt, to that of his assignees. (Re v. The London Assurance Company, 5 B. & Ald. 899; S.C., 1 D. & R. 510; Anon., 2 Ld. Raym. 989). Nor to the Bank of England to compel them to transfer stock, because an action would lie if they refused. (Re v. The Bank of England, Doug. 506). Nor to a trading corporation, at the instance of one of its members, to compel them to produce their accounts for the purpose of declaring a dividend of the profits. Abbott, C.J., said, "It is, in effect, an application on behalf of one of several partners to compel his co-partners to produce their accounts of profit and loss, and to divide their profits, if any there be. The examination of the accounts of a trading company may be effectually entered into in the Court of Chancery; but this Court is a very unfit tribunal for such a subject. A mere trading corporation differs materially from those which are intrusted with the government of cities and towns, and, therefore, have important public duties to perform. No instance has been cited in which the Court has granted a mandamus to a corporation like the present; and I think we ought not now to establish the precedent." (Re v. The Bank of England, 2 B. & Ald. 620, 622).

* Sect. 117. And be it further enacted, that in all cases where in exercise of the powers, &c., any part of any carriage or horse road, &c., shall be found necessary to be cut through, raised, sunk, &c., or so much injured as to be impassable or inconvenient, &c., the company shall be as convenient for passengers and carriages as the road so to be cut through, &c., or as nearly so as may be; and where the road cut through, raised, sunk, or injured shall be a turnpike road, the substituted road, if temporary, shall be set out and made, and the principal road shall be restored within six calendar months after the commencement of the operation.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 26, 1848.

A CASE of a very singular character (Green v. Green, V. C. E. 1840) is reported in a note in the 5th vol. of Hare's Chancery Reports, p. 400. The bill stated a settlement on the marriage of S. F. Green and Ann Green, by which certain leasehold houses, and certain furniture and other chattels, and some money deposited in a savings' bank, were settled to the separate use of the wife, remainder to the husband for life, with remainders over. It then stated that the husband, Samuel Francis Green, without the consent of the plaintiff (his wife) had entered into receipt of the rents and profits of the settled premises, had distrained the goods of some of the tenants, and had possessed himself, and sold and disposed of some of the furniture and effects, and had applied such rents and proceeds to his own use; that he had also taken possession of the house No. 2, Whiting-street, and threatened in like manner to possess himself of a sum of 30*l.* belonging to the plaintiff in the Lambeth Savings' Bank, being part of the settled property. The plaintiff, upon affidavit of these facts, obtained an ex-parte injunction, restraining the defendant Samuel Francis Green and his agents from receiving or taking any proceedings to recover possession of the money in the savings' bank, or interest thereof, and from taking any further or other proceedings by distress or otherwise, against the tenants or occupiers of the pieces or parcels of ground, messuages or tenements, hereditaments and premises, or other the trust estates, and from receiving the rents and profits thereof, or otherwise intermeddling or interfering with the trust estates, furniture, effects, monies, and premises, and from continuing in possession of the house and premises, No. 2, Whiting-street.

On a motion to dissolve this injunction upon the coming in of the answer, it was admitted that the husband had possessed himself of the furniture and effects, and occupied the house No. 2, Whiting-street, where the plaintiff (the wife) resided, but the husband said it was with the wife's consent.

It was argued, for the husband, that the injunction, at any rate so far as it restrained the husband from continuing in possession of the house in which the wife resided, and from interfering with the furniture comprised in the settlement, could not be sustained, as it operated as a divorce à mensâ et thoro. But the Vice-Chancellor said, "The Court had only to consider whether a trust for the separate use of the wife was created. There was nothing unlawful in the settlement, and he saw nothing to prevent the Court from protecting the interests of the parties under it. If the injunction had the effect attributed to it, a question which he could not determine, the husband would not be without his remedy in the Ecclesiastical Court."

The consequence of this decision might be very singular. It is clear, that restraining the husband from continuing in possession of the house inhabited by his wife, would have the practical effect, if the wife insisted upon inhabiting it, of a divorce à mensâ et thoro. Now, if the husband were to take proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, and obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, so as to compel the wife to live with him, he of course would be obliged, unless she waived her right to the injunction, to remove her to another house. So that if it happened, as it might happen, that the wife was unable to obtain a tenant for her house, the effect of the injunction and decree of the Ecclesiastical Court, would be to protect her separate property, by rendering it wholly unprofitable. It is clear that the Ecclesiastical Court can have no authority to enforce its decree in such a manner as to nullify the order of the Court of Chancery. It is equally clear that the Court of Chancery does not usually make an order, where it sees that the regular proceedings of another court over which it has no control, may render the order perfectly useless; nor is there any ground for conceiving that the Court of Chancery, applying its doctrine as to separate estate, possesses any jurisdiction to control the marital right of the husband, in regard to compelling his wife to cohabit with him. Assuming, therefore, that a husband has a right to insist upon his wife cohabiting with him, it might, perhaps, be doubted whether the Court, looking to the protection of a married woman in the enjoyment of her separate estate, is right in making an order which must virtually drive her from that enjoyment, if the husband enforce, on his part a common-law right with which the Court of Chancery does not pretend to interfere.

It may, perhaps, also be doubted as matter of law, whether the doctrine of equity with regard to separate estate, goes so far as to protect the wife in the enjoyment of property, so as to exclude the husband from any other right than such rights of property as would otherwise accrue to him in respect of his wife's property. We do not doubt, of course, that the Court has jurisdiction to protect the wife from any interference by the husband with her property, which would subtract from her rights of ownership over it merely as property. But if she thinks fit to use it in a form in which she can only be protected in her exclusive enjoyment, by excluding the husband from being in the same locality with herself, then is not restraining the husband doing something more than restraining him from interfering with her separate enjoyment of property? Is it not, in fact, restricting his common-law right of being in the presence of his wife? We are aware it may be answered to this, that the wife's separate house is in the legal ownership of her trustees, and that any person but a cetui que trust, insisting upon entering such house, is in the nature of a trespasser. But that does not solve the real difficulty, which is, whether a wife, celle que trust for her separate use of a house, and having herself a right to the use of such house, does not take it subject to the right of her husband of being present wherever she has a right to be. If, as incident to his right of being present, there is an inevitable user of her property, as by sitting in her chairs, or writing at her table, we apprehend it may be contended, that if the Court cannot sever the right from its incident, the right ought to be allowed to take effect. We believe there is no authority on this point, except Green v. Green, which does not appear to have been much argued, and which certainly does not seem to be wholly free from objection.

ANALYSIS OF THE BILL FOR PROMOTING THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

(Brought in by Viscount Morpeth, Lord John Russell, Sir George Grey, and Mr. Attorney-General).

The extent of the interests involved in this measure, and the anxious endeavours of its promoters to conceal from the public its true objects and tendencies, render it important that some easy means should be afforded of knowing and understanding what those objects and tendencies really are. Such means the following analysis of its main provisions will afford. The bill is heavily backed by her Majesty's ministers, but not disproportionately to its real importance. It is, in fact, one vast Political Inclosure Bill—a bill to suppress and inclose all the “open and common fields” provided by our Saxon constitution for the exercise and enjoyment by the subject of those rights and privileges of self-government which have always been recognised as the root and firm basis of English liberties—a scheme strangely out of harmony with the loud outcries of the same class of reformers for public walks, and parks and places for physical exercise and recreation. It is a proposal to take away from every municipal corporation and local jurisdiction in England and Wales the principal part of its powers of managing its own affairs, and regulating its local taxation and expenditure. It is also its first proposal that has been made to give an extensive power of taxation to a non-representative and irresponsible body.

The preamble recites the importance of placing the supply of water, the sewerage*, drainage, and paving of towns, &c., under one local management, subject to general central supervision. What is attempted by the bill is, however, more extensive than this.

Sect. 4 constitutes a central board of five, to which the subsequent sections give absolute power.

Sects. 5, 6, and 7, provide for a host of officers of this board and their salaries.

Sect. 8 declares this to be not a general act, but a mere partial and local one, the putting in operation of which in any place is to depend on the mere arbitrary will and pleasure of this central board of five. As a colour to conceal this arbitrary power, any five householders of any town or place, whether large or small, may, without any public meeting, present a petition, upon which the central board may act, “if and when they shall think fit.”

Sect. 9 provides for inquiries and report to be made by a “superintending inspector,” sent down to any place by the central board of five.

Sect. 10 gives absolute power to consider the effect of such report (which, from the necessity of the case, can never be a reliable one) to the central board of five.

Thus an absolute and irresponsible power is given to the central board of five to determine whether or not, and when, means shall be adopted for promoting public health in any town or place throughout all England and Wales.

Sects. 11 to 23 prescribe how the local body which is to do the work of the central board shall be constituted. All the main functions of town councils are taken away from them, and lodged in a local committee; yet the town councils are suffered to exist, stripped of all their powers and authority. A more bungling piece of legislation it would be difficult to conceive.

Care is taken to avoid stating how large the number of the local board shall be, that being left to the Queen in council, which means of course to the will and pleasure sure of the central board of five, and will be what shall be thought most convenient and subservient to it. So far is this carried, that even the mode of voting for members of the local board and the allowance of expenses are all to depend on the will and pleasure of the central board of five, who take care to reserve to themselves also a frequent direct influence in the appointment of the chairman of the body whose constitution is thus entirely placed under their control.

Sect. 24, which, like many others in this act, is contradictory in its parts, allows the local board to appoint officers subject to the approval of the central board of five. They have no power to appoint any one on their own authority. All salaries are also to be subject to the will and pleasure of the same central board of five.

Sect. 27 orders levels and plans to be taken and made, as shall be prescribed by the central board of five.

Sects. 28 to 32 relate to sewers and drains; all works as to which are to be entirely dependent on the consent and approval of the central board of five.

Sects. 33 to 35 relate to drains and privies. But no local board, from Berwick to Land's End, is to have authority to enforce the wholesome mode of building a single privy without the express sanction, first had and obtained, of the central board of five.

Sect. 36 gives power to the surveyor, in any place, to enter the house of any man in England on a nominal notice of twenty-four hours, without any cause or reason assigned, with any number of workmen, and there to remain as long as he likes, and to open any drains, &c., without any check or power of restraint, and without making any compensation whatever for any damage done or annoyance occasioned. It is to be his regular duty to do this without cause, for it is expressly provided, that "if the drain, privy, water-closet, or cess-pool in respect of which such examination is made, be found to be in proper order and condition, he shall cause the ground to be closed, and any damage done to be made good as soon as can be;" the expense of the interference or job (not any compensation for it) being defrayed out of the district rate.

Sects. 37 to 41 relate to surface cleansing of streets, &c., and forbid covering or making a single drain in any place in England without the express approval and permission of the central board of five first had and obtained. (All soil, filth, &c., collected is vested in the local board).

Sect. 42 gives very imperfect powers as to the smoke nuisance; and those only to be put in operation with the consent of the central board of five.

Sects. 43 to 47 relate to slaughter-houses, &c.; and the approval and prescribed rules of the central board of five, are again indispensable.

Sect. 48 places all the ventilation under the immediate control of the central board of five, without even the nominal ministry, as elsewhere, of its tool, the local board. No court of justice, church, chapel, or theatre, or other place of public entertainment, or for the assemblage of large numbers of people (very definite!) is to be built until the central board of five has seen the plan, or at all, if they disapprove of the plan. This is an improvement on the Building Act, in simplicity at least.

Sects. 49 and 50 contain inconsistent and unintelligible provisions as to public lodging-houses and underground rooms.

Sects. 51 to 57 relate to streets, &c.; not one of which can be levelled, nor can premises be purchased "for the purpose of widening, opening, enlarging, or otherwise improving it," without the previous consent of the central board of five.

Sects. 58 to 65 relate to the supply of water. The most important provisions are contradictory and utterly unintelligible; leaving it only plain that the supply shall be just such as shall be directed by the central board of five.

Sects. 66 to 69 relate to burials and burying grounds, of the propriety of which last in any place the central board of five, and not the local board, is to be sole judge.

Sect. 70 contains tautological provisions as to purchase of lands by local boards; all which, however, is carefully ordered to be only permissible by consent of the central board of five.

Sect. 71 forbids a single contract to the amount of more than 200*l.* being entered into without being first submitted to, and sanctioned by, the central board of five.

Sects. 72 to 92 relate to rates, with respect to which our space will only allow us to say, that they are "to be collected and paid in such manner and form, to such extent, and at such times," as the central board of five "shall from time to time think proper to direct."

Sect. 94 gives most extraordinary and unheard of powers to the Queen in Council (practically to the central board of five) to repeal at pleasure all or any local acts, and to make any new enactments they may please, under the name of "such further directions as may be necessary for adapting any such local act or enactment to the machinery and provisions of this act."

Sects. 95 to 98 relate to compensation to ousted officers, surveyors of roads, &c.

Sects. 100 to 105 enforce the arbitrary powers of the central board of five over every place brought within the operation of the act; and, in sect. 103, is contained a sweeping clause,—lest by any accident (a groundless fear) any independent powers might seem to be lodged in the local board,—that, in certain cases named, "and in such other cases as may, from time to time, be directed by the said" central board of five, all particulars which such central board shall itself direct shall be submitted to the said central board of five as a necessary preliminary to any local proceedings whatever! Thus, not the least thing of any sort can be done by any local board, in any place from Berwick to Land's End, however pressing the emergency, and however obvious the necessity to all familiar with the place, without previous submission to and permission of the mere arbitrary caprice of a central board of five men in London, overworked and testy, to speak only of condition and temper, as such unfortunate central board must necessarily be. And lest, by accident, any local board should, at any time, feel disposed to fulfil its real duties, this power to put on the screw is carefully reserved to themselves by the central board of five.

Having embodied such an enactment, any further enabling provisions become clearly unnecessary; and, accordingly, the remaining sections of the act relate to mere technical points, arbitrations, legal proceedings, &c.

Not a word is said throughout the act as to the laws now in force for securing public health, or the slightest attempt made to bring those laws into more efficient operation.

On this subject our readers may advantageously refer to Mr. Toulmin Smith's work on the Laws of England relating to Public Health, which we have noticed on a former occasion, and from which we extract the following summary of the author's suggestions:—

"It has been already seen, that effectual and simple measures might readily be adopted for giving full effect to true and real sanitary improvement. It has been seen (pp. 43, 53, &c.), how much and effectually might be done in regard to preventing the accumulation of matters injurious to health, by an amplification, at no additional expense, of the powers of the police. It has also been seen (pp. 106, 107) how the improvement of town and country drainage (the latter of which no proposed measure has touched) might be ensured by simple means, and with no additional public burthen. If the proposed bill in addition to such points and the union of the now scattered functions (see pp. 126, 130) were to vest in town councils and the local authorities elsewhere, and to make obligatory upon them the regular discharge of the powers by law now vested in courts leet and other various bodies for removal and prevention of nuisances, as well as jurisdiction in all cases in which a right of action or abatement as regards private nuisances now exists, with the addition of the discretionary power to remove such nuisances as have been alluded to in p. 20, on proper compensation being made, together with authority to erect waterworks, &c., (pp. 115, 137); far more and more effectually and simply would be done than is proposed or can be effected by the measure now before Parliament. The carrying out of the suggestion in pp. 128, 130, would effectually secure the efficient enforcement of the duties thus cast on the local authorities."

No government, whether central or local, can be carried on without more or less of jobbing; but we prefer taking our chance of local jobs, against which, as individuals, we may fight with some hope of success, to submitting to vast central jobs as unassailable as windmills; and, above all, we object to an invasion of the Pignies and the Titans at the same time, to the tyranny of a horde of local jobs under the countenance and shelter of five central giants.

We add only one word. If this act, or anything like it, passes into a law, it will have to be recorded in history that the Court of Star Chamber was abolished in 17 Car. 1, A.D. 1641, but was re-established, with greatly increased powers, in 11 Victoria, A.D. 1848.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where by an act of Parliament, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 82, (local and personal, public), incorporating a company for supplying a town with water, the company were authorised to make waterworks, weirs, and other like works, in the parish of L., and from time to time regulate and continue the same, subject to certain restrictions therein contained, and to go, enter, and pass in, upon, over, under, and through all or any of the rivers, brooks, streams, waters, highways, &c., and all other lands and places of or belonging to any person or persons, &c., mentioned and specified in the plans and books of reference thereafter mentioned, which plans and books, specifying the lands through which it was intended to pass and the owners, were to be lodged with the clerk of the peace. And the act further empowered them to agree for the purchase of lands; &c.; and the tenants for life, &c., and owners and occupiers of lands through which the works were to pass, were to receive satisfaction for the value of the land and the damages sustained in making the works, the amount to be settled, if necessary, by a compensation jury at the quarter sessions, to be summoned by the company's warrant to the sheriff, on notice to be given, upon which the jury were to assess the purchase-money or compensation, and settle what share was to be allowed to any tenant or person having a particular interest: the sessions were to give judgment for the sum awarded, and the verdict and judgment were to be registered among the records of the quarter sessions, and to be deemed records. Another section of the act further directed the assessment of compensation for any damages not before provided for, accruing by reason of the execution of any of the powers in the act. The company, in carrying out their undertaking, made certain alterations in a weir in L. across a river, which caused a rise in the water so as to damage a mill in L., of which T. was tenant for life: neither the mill, weir, the site, or T.'s name was inserted in the books or plan, nor was the weir within the line of works there described; but that part of the river in which the weir and mill were situated was. The Court granted a mandamus to the company, commanding them to issue their warrant for a jury to assess the damages sustained by T., upon which the jury assessed a certain sum by way of compensation. On refusal of the company to pay the sum, together with the costs, the Court granted a mandamus to the company to pay the amount so assessed and costs, notwithstanding the statute made the verdict and judgment records of the court of quarter sessions. (Reg. v. The Company of Proprietors of the Nottingham Old Water Works, 6 Adol. & Ell. 355). So, where by a statute, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 126, the trustees of the Swansea Harbour were empowered to take lands for the purposes of the act, paying a compensation to be assessed by a jury, and the trustees refused to pay after assessment, the Court awarded a mandamus. (Reg. v. The Trustees of Swansea Harbour, 8 Adol. & Ell. 430).

Where, by certain acts relating to the navigation of a river, the commissioners were authorised to make such cuts as they should deem necessary for the navigation; it was provided, that if any persons were aggrieved, they were to make complaint to the commissioners, and if on such complaint they were dissatisfied with their order, an appeal was given to the quarter sessions. A person considering himself so aggrieved having applied to the commissioners, without obtaining the relief sought, appealed to the quarter sessions, who awarded him 1600*l.* for damages, and 200*l.* for costs. On refusal by the commissioners to pay this amount, the Court directed a mandamus to issue to compel the payment. (Reg. v. The Thames Navigation, 5 Adol. & Ell. 804; S. C., 6 Law Journ., Q. B. 17). So, the Court granted a mandamus to the commissioners of land tax to compel them to proceed to elect a clerk in the department for the rates and duties on windows; (Reg. v. St. Martin, Westminster, 1 T. R. 146; see 25 Geo. 3, c. 4); and if elected, a mandamus will go to swear and admit him. (Reg. v. Thatcher, 1 D. & R. 246). So, a mandamus lies to the commissioners of the London Court of Requests to hear and determine a suit instituted in their court by the Chamberlain of London. (Reg. v. The London Court of Requests, 7 East, 292). So, where a clerk to the commissioners of a court of requests, appointed under a local act, applied for a mandamus to T. H. and the commissioners, to deliver up all books and papers belonging to his office, the Court granted the writ in the first instance. The writ, however, not shewing that the detainer was by a person other than a private individual, was, on argument, held bad. (Reg. v. Hopkins, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 161). So, to the commissioners of excise to grant a permit. (Reg. v. The Commissioners of Excise, 2 T. R. 385). So, to commissioners of inclosure to set out an occupation road to allotments of land under an inclosure act; but, if a long period is suffered to elapse before applying for the writ, the Court will refuse it. (Reg. v. Cookermouth, 1 B. & Adol. 378; Reg. v. Dean Inclosure, 2 M. & S. 80; Reg. v. The Stainforth Canal Company, 1 M. & S. 32; Reg. v. Flockwood Inclosure, 2 Chit. 251). So, to execute an award under an inclosure act, if it distinctly appear by affidavit that the commissioner has been applied to and refused. (Reg. v. Prior Ditton, 4 Jur. 193). So to commissioners under a drainage act to administer the oath required to a person elected as a special commissioner. (Reg. v. Kelt, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 660; see 41 Geo. 3, c. 136). So, to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to issue a Treasury minute or authority for payment of the arrears of a pension, it appearing that the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury had granted a retiring pension to a party under the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 113, and informed him of their intention to submit a vote to Parliament granting him a retired allowance at a certain sum per annum, and the Appropriation Act subsequently granted a sum in gross for the several purposes specified, amongst which was the pension in question. The party, upon application at different times to the Treasury, was told, that, if he would apply to certain officers named, he would receive his pension and all arrears; but one of those officers stated, that he had no funds, and the other, he had received no authority from the Treasury for that purpose, and refused payment, unless he would enter into a bond to forego certain legal proceedings, which he refused. Lord Denman, C. J., said—The correspondence on the part of the Lords of the Treasury amounts to a recognition that they have the money, and have the control over it; but they seek to annex conditions to the payment, which they have no right to do. If, then, this is only the case of public officers having the control of a sum of money for this particular purpose, there is no reason that a mandamus should not issue. They are officers under the Crown, but the Crown has no more to do with them for this purpose than with any other officers. They are merely parties who have received a sum of money as trustees for an individual, under the provisions of an act of Parliament. (Reg. v. The Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, 4 Adol. & Ell. 286, 976; In re Hand, Id. 984; Ex parte Ricketts, Id. 999). So, the Court will grant a mandamus to the commissioners of tithes, under the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, upon refusal by them to perform any duty assigned by the act. (Reg. v. The Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, 12 Law Journ., Q. B., 109). Where allotments were set out under an inclosure act to a party claiming them, and possession given in or about 1817; there was no road to them, nor any access but through allotments made or land sold under the act to other persons. On motion, in 1829, for a mandamus to the commissioners (who had not yet published their award) to set out an occupation road to the first-mentioned allotments, the Court refused the application, as being too late. (Reg. v. The Cockermouth Inclosure, 1 B. & Adol. 378; Reg. v. Stainforth, 1 M. & S. 32). Where an act of Parliament authorising commissioners to make a cut for a canal gives them the option of carrying it one of two ways, the Court will not grant a mandamus to make a particular cut. (Reg. v. The Birmingham Canal Company, 2 Black. Rep. 708). So, the Court refused a mandamus to commissioners, under a local act, on the application of a company, in order to compel them to perform a contract made with them. So, at the instance of certain ratepayers, ordering them to provide for the execution of the powers under the act, no inconvenience appearing to have been suffered by the inhabitants. (Reg. v. Cheltenham, 4 Jur. 1060). So, the Court refused a mandamus to the commissioners of sewers to reimburse the owner of lands a sum of money expended in repairing a sea wall, the damage having arisen by default of the party bound to repair. (Reg. v. The Sewers in Essex, 1 B. & C. 477; 1 D. & R. 700). So, to commissioners of bankrupt to certify the bankrupt's conformity to the Lord Chancellor. (Ex parte John King, 7 East, 92, n.; 13 Ves. 181; 15 Ves. 120). Nor does a mandamus lie to the commissioners of customs to deliver up certain goods upon which a duty had been paid, but which they held subject to the payment of higher duties, for they were either justified in holding them or not; if not, they were subject to an action; besides which, a mandamus cannot be granted against a party acting merely as officer of the Crown. (Reg. v. The Customs Commissioners, 5 Adol. & Ell. 380; S. C., 1 Nev. & P. 536; and see In re De Bode, 6 Dow, 776).

Where one of two persons, joint owners of a vessel, died, and the survivor sold the vessel to G., without reference to the deceased owner's claim to a moiety, and after applied to the comptroller of customs to grant a certificate of registry pursuant to the stat. 34 Geo. 3, c. 68, who refused, on the ground that the representatives of the deceased owner did not join in the application, the Court refused to grant the writ. (Reg. v. The Collector and Comptroller of the Customs of England, 2 M. & S. 223).

Where the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, under the 55th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, made an order for the payment of a certain portion of an insolvent's pension to his assignees, and had required the commissioners of excise, by whom it was payable, to consent to such order, which they had refused to do, the Court would not grant a mandamus to the commissioners in order to compel them. Williams, J., said, "It appears to me that the words of that section give the commissioners of excise a discretionary power to confer or withhold their consent. I have, therefore, great difficulty in granting a mandamus compelling them to do an act in which the statute says they are to have a discretion." (In re Philip Heward, 1 Dowl. & L. 753).

Nor does a mandamus lie to the Lords of the Admiralty for payment of the arrears of half-pay of a naval officer, where deductions were made in pursuance of a general order from the Admiralty, although the Lords of the Admiralty, in answer to an application, had given directions for restoring it, but afterwards retracted their consent. (Ex parte Ricketts, 4 Adol. & Ell. 999; S. C., 6 Nev. & M. 523; see also In re Smyth, 4 Adol. & Ell. 976; and Re Hand, Id. 984).

Where a party had a superannuation allowance granted him in pursuance of a Treasury minute, according to 60 Geo. 3, c. 117, in respect of an office; the Treasury minute having been revoked, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the Lords of the Treasury to restore such minute to their books, and to submit an application to Parliament in the Estimates for the current year for a grant, on account of the allowance sanctioned by the minute. (Reg. v. The Lords of the Treasury, in re Smyth, 4 B. & Adol. 976; see also In re Hand, Id. 984). It is an established rule, that a mandamus will not lie to the Crown or its servants strictly as such, commanding it or them to pay over money in its or their possession, in liquidation of claims on the Crown. (In re De Bode, 6 Dow, 776).

Where, by a patent for an invention, it was stipulated that the patentee should supply for his Majesty's service so much of the invented article as should be required, at such reasonable prices as should be settled for that purpose by the Admiralty, the Court refused a mandamus to the Lords of the Admiralty to settle the terms according to the patent, the Court saying they could not grant a mandamus to a public board ordering them to carry a contract into effect. (Ex parte Paring, 4 Adol. & Ell. 949; S. C., 6 Nev. & M. 472, per Patteson, J.). Nor does a mandamus lie to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to compel them to pay a poor-rate in respect of lands holden by them under the Crown. (Ex parte Reeve, 5 Dow. 668). Although, as we have before seen, the Court will grant a mandamus in certain cases to the tithe commissioners, still, where an application was made under the 45th section of the act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, to compel the commissioner to make his award, he having declined, notwithstanding he had inquired into the validity of the modus pending certain tithe suits, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to compel him. (Re Tithe Commissioners, 1 Dowl., N. S., 810; Reg. v. The Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, 12 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 109).

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1844; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1844. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, MARCH 4, 1848.

THERE are several Chancery lawyers in the House of Commons who are already engaged on a committee of inquiry into divers matters of great importance to Chancery suitors. It would be a useful addition to their field of this labour, if they were directed by the House to inquire into the propriety and feasibility of importing into Chancery practice the viva-voce examination of witnesses at the hearing of a cause. It is now some years since, on this subject, the Chancery Commission expressed itself as follows:—

“An objection that has been often made to the present mode of taking proofs in the Court of Chancery is, that it deprives the judge who is to decide the cause, of the benefit of an oral examination, and an observation of the demeanour and conduct of the witnesses; but this objection cannot be removed, because it is obviously impossible for the Lord Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, and Vice-Chancellor to take all examinations in person. But if it were otherwise, it would be necessary either to have a Court of Chancery perpetually going the circuits of the country, or to bring all witnesses to London, which would be attended with serious inconvenience and heavy expense. Another objection is, that the parties have not the opportunity of being present, by their counsel, to question and cross-examine witnesses viva voce. But we very much doubt, whether any alteration in this respect could be introduced which would, upon the whole, operate as an improvement. In the first place, such an alteration would increase the costs of a suit, and the time employed would also be lengthened by objections taken, and by arguments raised upon points of evidence; and a judge would be required of sufficient weight and authority to control the course of examination within legal and proper limits. And even if such a judge were provided, the full benefit which results from the viva-voce examination before a judge and jury in a court of law could not be obtained from oral examinations in a Court of Chancery, inasmuch as such examinations could not be taken in the presence of the judge who is to decide the cause. In cases of much doubt upon the facts, resort must still be had to the trial of issues before a jury, which course is now taken in all such cases where that mode of trial is properly required. If we could feel satisfied that the increase of delay and expense which would probably follow from having open and public examinations conducted by counsel could lead to any material saving of either in the ultimate decision of a cause, we should be inclined to recommend the experiment; but we do not think that this would be the case.”

One traces in the language of this report, the optimism of that Eldonian school of Chancery lawyers, who, while professing occasionally a perception of defects in existing practice, always came somehow to the conclusion, that nothing established, and above all, nothing established in Chancery, could be touched, without letting in evils so far exceeding in number those that were removed, that, practically, the existing system must be taken to be the best of all possible systems, and must be let alone. In the short passages that we have extracted, there are assertions and expressions of opinion, which, whatever might be thought of them at the time, will not now probably be received with implicit deference, unsupported as they are by either evidence or argument. It is in the first place taken for granted, that the evidence cannot be heard by the judges themselves; but why it cannot is not explained. There seems no greater difficulty in an equity judge hearing evidence taken viva voce, than in his hearing, as he does, all the written depositions read by counsel. The time consumed might or might not be greater. There is no very good reason to suppose that it would, for it does not take longer to ask a plain question and receive a plain answer to it, than it does to read the lengthy answer to an involved written interrogatory. But if the time consumed in court were greater, the time consumed out of court would be very much less, and there is much ground for believing that the total expense to the suitor would be diminished.

Again, it is assumed by the Chancery Commissioners, as an unanswerable objection, that it would be necessary either to have a Court of Chancery going circuits perpetually, or else to bring all witnesses to London. Now, waiving for the present the consideration whether it would be more absurd or even more inconvenient for the Court of Chancery to go circuits than for the judges of the common law to do so, and assuming that such a proceeding is altogether inadmissible, the alternative mischief, viz. that of bringing witnesses to London, is in fact the proceeding actually adopted in a considerable portion of the causes heard in Chancery. And if in comparing expenses, the expense of commissions to examine witnesses in the country; the expense of preparing the written examinations of the witnesses, whether town or country witnesses; and the expenses of the examiner's office, all of which would be saved if the witnesses were simply produced and examined in court as they are at common law, it is a question whether expense would not on the whole rather be saved than increased by bringing witnesses to London to be examined vivâ voce.

A few years ago there was no practical instance of a superior judge in equity hearing vivâ-voce evidence, so that the Chancery Commissioners had it all their own way, at least, so far as this, that while they theorized at their pleasure against the feasibility of introducing that mode of doing business in equity, they could stigmatize as mere theory all suggestions for introducing it. But the practice of the Court of Review, in which a judge sitting alone and trying bankruptcy cases after the fashion of equity, has, with the utmost success, administered justice as occasion required it, by hearing vivâ voce instead of written evidence—has established the fact that that system of procedure may be most advantageously used in a court constituted, and in other respects proceeding, in the same manner as the Court of Chancery.

Of the gross defects of the Chancery system of taking evidence, by administering to the witness written interrogatories in the solitude of the examiner's office, and presenting that evidence to the judge in all its stiff formality, without the aid of effective cross-examination, and without the aid of personal observation of the manner of the witness, there is and can be but one opinion. It is, indeed, as judges have expressed it, a frail and imperfect mode of arriving at the truth.

That it is enormously expensive, is perfectly well known. That it leads to great unnecessary expense, is also well known to Chancery practitioners, and will be easily conceived by those unlearned in the ways of Chancery, when they are told, that, in general, the counsel who prepare the interrogatories are not informed what any particular witness can be called to prove, and, consequently, prepare the interrogatories not with a view to extract the particular evidence, but with a view to prove a given case out of the mouths of a set of imaginary witnesses, not half of whom may ever come to light; so that when a set of Chancery depositions is read, a large portion of it consists of answers stating in lengthy terms the witness's ignorance of facts, as to which he never would have been interrogated, or at least would have been interrogated with the utmost brevity, if counsel had the advantage of examining him personally. That this system is, therefore, not only very expensive, but very unnecessarily expensive, we again assert is proved by experience.

That it would be more expensive to bring witnesses into court, and there examine them vivâ voce, remains to be tried; and it is at least worth the trial. And if be remembered that wherever there is a conflict of evidence, in other words, wherever there is really anything to try upon the evidence, the parties are now sent to law through the medium of an issue, through which medium they rarely get back into Chancery under a twelvemonth, or without an immense increase of expense, it may be fairly doubted whether a public examination of the witnesses at the hearing of a case in equity, would not, generally speaking, save instead of increasing both time and expense. At any rate, we apprehend a fair prima facie case is made out for an inquiry into the propriety of introducing this mode of taking evidence into equity practice; and we do trust that the talents and knowledge of the able and energetic Chancery lawyers who are at present in Parliament, will be pressed into the public service to consider and report to the House on this subject.

PUBLIC HEALTH BILL.

Speech of Viscount Morpeth in the House of Commons on Tuesday, 10th February, 1848, on moving for Leave to bring in a Bill for promoting the Public Health.

[Ridgway.]

We return to this bill, of which we gave an analysis in our last Number, on account of its extreme importance as regards both its immediate and its prospective consequences, and because the public and its leaders, the press, seem to be still as profoundly ignorant of the tendency of the bill and the designs of those who are at the bottom of it, as are the respectable and well-intentioned part of its promoters.

The pretext for the measure is the existence throughout the country of considerable and removable causes of disease, a fact which we never heard disputed. We did not need a commission to parade before us the details of cesspools and foul drains, with which every man was sufficiently familiar from his own observation. What we wanted was an inquiry into the existing laws for the removal of such nuisances—an investigation of the causes which have prevented those laws from more perfectly effecting their object, and of the means of improving and infusing vigour into them, and securing their proper administration. What has been done? After taking a vast amount of evidence upon matters perfectly well understood, we have a measure prepared in profound ignorance of the existing laws, superseding an ancient, elaborately organised system of local government and management, which has subsisted in this country from the times immediately following the Norman Conquest—a system to which we owe the gradual acquisition of our liberties, and, what is of equal importance, the capacity of our constitution for progressive amendment without revolution and with stability—a system peculiar to this country, and for want of which a neighbouring great people, though possessing abundance of courage and love of independence, find themselves at the end of half a century of struggle no further advanced towards the settlement of a free constitution than when they began. This system of local management, by which the people are trained and accustomed to self-government, so that when, upon the emergency of any popular movement, they become possessed of extraordinary power, they are able to restrain themselves in the exercise of it—this system, co-equal at least in importance with our representative system, the framers of this bill coolly propose to sweep away, without even a passing allusion to its existence. The proposal on the part of the honest promoters of the scheme is to be explained only by their absolute ignorance of the matter they are meddling with; but there are others to whom the benefit of this charitable construction cannot be extended. In casting about to see what use could be made of the fashionable sanitary cant, they found that improving and facilitating the application of the existing laws would not answer their end. The common law afforded no means of bringing to a focus the stray materials of jobbing that lay scattered up and down the country. No job worth having could be had without centralization on the Prussian and Louis-Phillipian system, without separating the power of taxation from responsibility to the tax-payers. Now, to get subscribers to a job, it is necessary to rig the market, and accordingly all the well-meaning but not over-wise philanthropists of the day were set to work to preach a crusade against disease and infection, as if it were a thoroughly new idea, and as if the common law knew no such head as that of Nuisance. Novelty being the grand object, we had not only a new terminology, but a new mode of spelling introduced. Until Mr. Toulmin Smith, by his well-timed publication on the Laws relating to Public Health, set the matter forth in a popular, but at the same exact and business-like manner, it was not known to a tithe of those who joined in the cry for sanitary legislation, that the law of England, from the earliest period, had the most careful regard to the public health*, not theoretically, but practically,—that in former times, when business was more attended to than cant, simple but effective acts of Parliament were passed, declaratory of the ancient law and enforcing it. As a single instance, we may refer to a statute of Richard II., quoted by Mr. Smith, (p. 22), most remarkable as to its declared objects and provisions. If these laws are useless, it would be but decent at least to repeal them, and not to leave upon the statute book two conflicting sets of provisions for the same object. But the fact is, that the existing laws are neither obsolete nor useless. They are in full vigour and operation, and it is to them that we owe, among other blessings, our pre-eminence over all other people in cleanliness and health. They are enforced as far as the enforcement of them is called for by the desires and habits of the people; and if the result is not perfection, it is because the millennium is still at a distance. Mr. Smith has shewn, that every cause of disease which has been denounced by the Sanitary Commissioners is a nuisance within the meaning of the existing law, and removable by the simplest and most inexpensive means. While we write, nuisances are being put down in various directions, which have been hitherto permitted, not because they were irremovable, but because no one thought it important to remove them.

In order to terrify the public into a hasty assent to the first measure that might be proposed, and to shut the mouth of all opposition, a cry was raised, without any foundation, that the cholera was come; and when it was perceived that those who inquired into the matter had ascertained that the cholera, when actually present, in its greatest virulence, (in 1832), did not increase the rate of mortality†, but merely took the place of other diseases, and that moreover the cholera had not come, and was not coming, another ground was taken, and the influenza, an epidemic much more fatal in England than the cholera, was called in aid, though every one knows that that epidemic, unlike our friends the alarmists, has never distinguished itself by haunting the localities of bad drainage.

Personality is to be carefully excluded from the discussion of every general question, but in the business of a job the characters and motives of its promoters are the main part of the investigation. We therefore proceed without apology to the principal actor in this revival of the Malade Imaginaire, who has obligingly undertaken the parts of Beline and M. Purgon both at once. The Drs. Diafoirus, père et fils, though very amusing, are inferior artists, whom we must pass over. Who is it that promises “nettoyer notre corps, et en évacuer entièrement les mauvaises humeurs;—vider le fond du sac,” (though we hope that the public will think with Toinette “qu’il est indigne de ses soins”)—that threatens that if we do not submit to his “cly-stère," "inventé et formé dans toutes les règles de l'art," we shall fall into "le bradipepsie; de la bradipepsie dans la dispepsie; de la dispepsie dans l'apepsie; de l'apepsie dans la lienterie; de la lienterie dans la dissenterie; de la dissenterie dans l'hydropisie; de l'hydropisie dans la privation de la vie, où nous aura conduit notre folie?"—It is our old friend the Ex-Secretary to the Poor Law Commission.

* The following extract from the Journals of the House of Commons, under date “Mercurii, xii Junii, xii Jacobi,” proves incontestably that the public health engaged the attention of Parliament at a very early period:—

“Sir Ro. Owen.—That orders in Parliament, temp. H. VI., that no butcher should kill any meat nearer London, eastward, than Stratford-bow, nor westward, than Kensington, be enforced.”

† See the First Report of the Metropolitan Sanitary Commission. From the evidence printed by the commissioners, it appears that the men who are constantly employed in the London sewers are as healthy as any class of workmen. Not one of them died in the great cholera year. They were not frightened.

Mr. Chadwick is a gentleman who has long been known to possess considerable abilities, not, perhaps, of the highest order, but practical and capable of being turned to good account. More recently the public has recognised in the same gentleman the existence of other abilities, not inconsiderable, though of less obvious public utility,—for a description of which we refer our readers to Sir F. Lewis's evidence before the Andover Committee, or, what may be nearer to hand, the Paradise Lost, but not in the place where Abdiel is spoken of.

Mr. Chadwick, then, thus qualified, having recently buried one job, to which, with all its drawbacks, he was sincerely attached, is naturally seeking its successor. In such a search it would be useless to apply to history, to law, or to sound policy. The promoter of a job has no concern with such speculations, and hence that otherwise inexplicable disregard of all three which has characterised the affair from its commencement. But though Mr. Attorney-General, who indorses this bill, has not been at the pains to look into it, it shall not be our fault if the public do not. It behoves our professional readers to take notice, and to proclaim, that this is a bill of greater importance than any which has been proposed since the bill of rights—a bill affecting in no inconsiderable degree the property, the domestic privacy, and the daily comfort of every man in England.

A measure of such importance, if brought forward in good faith, should, and probably would, have been carefully considered and clearly expressed. For good work we require good tools; but any rusty ill-formed weapon will serve to do mischief, and accordingly Mr. Chadwick arms himself with a bill which might have been drawn by a village schoolmaster, simply contemptible as a piece of drafting, confused, rambling, verbose, contradictory, unintelligible to a degree without example even in the statute book. None the worse for setting up a job, rather the better, for it repels perusal, and is scarcely open to definite attack. Dolosus versatur in generalibus. Traces of the master hand are not, however, wanting. Commissions and centralization being unpopular, the words are carefully excluded from a bill, of which the sole object is to establish a central commission. Local boards are paraded through 130 sections only to be made in each the conduit pipes of some new arbitrary power to the Central Commission, which Commission appears as unobtrusively as may be under the modest title of "the general board," as if it were merely the silken thread that it is to give connexion to these scattered pearls. No cursory glance into this repulsive farrago would enable any one to discover that the only object for which it provides with any certainty is to paralyse all the local, elected, and responsible authorities throughout the country, and to transfer their powers of management and taxation, with great additions, to five irresponsible nominees of the Crown.

We rejoice to hear, that already several corporations, distinguished for what they have done towards sanitary improvement, are preparing to petition Parliament to be heard by counsel against Mr. Chadwick and his job—a demand which cannot be refused. We believe it would not be difficult to name the five defendants, who are already complaisantly discussing among themselves the distribution of the spoil. How competent the Government is to make a selection for such a purpose may be seen in their new Metropolitan Commission of Sewers, from among the members of which it would not be easy to select even a small minority possessed of the slightest practical or even theoretical knowledge of their business. Indeed, a glance at the names of the men now in office under this and similar commissions, is enough to suggest an objection to schemes of the kind, which would be conclusive, even if an honest administration of them could be secured. Sanitary improvement is a matter of science, of experience, of invention, of progress, which should be free to ingenuity and enterprise throughout the country. To place the control of the matter in the hands of two or three persons is to annihilate competition, and to limit the whole nation to the measure of their capacity and discretion. Let us fancy for a moment the consequences, if Dr. Reid, who, in his own opinion, has exhausted the subject of ventilation, were appointed to a place in this central board; or suppose that Mr. Roe (one of the Council of Five in expectancy, we believe,) were to insist on building egg-shaped drains with the big end downwards, (and men as eminent as Mr. Roe have been known to persist in more absurd crotchets than that), what would be the state of our ventilation and drainage during the reign of those gentlemen? This is not the way to do what Lord Morpeth promises,—to make the Imperial knowledge, science, and skill—our best heads and most adroit hands—available for the public service. Heaven defend the length and breadth of the land from the heads and hands, science and adroitness of Drs. Reid and Toynbee!

Means of ventilation are to be provided under the direct superintendence of the central board, and consistency (without which centralization is nothing) requires that the board should have power to see that its contrivances do not lie idle. It will, therefore, be necessary to quarter upon every district a corps of sanitary trappers, acting under orders from head quarters, and working our doors and windows as if they were the jib and foresail of a "highly disciplined" ship. A patient recovering from the pleurisy may then expect to be called up in February by the sanitary police to open his windows, back and front—"for" (he will be told) "Dr. Toynbee says the atmosphere has been highly deleterious during the week, and Dr. Reid finds that the salubrious stratum has just descended to the level of your bed-room."

We have written with a hearty desire to promote the cause of sanitary improvement, by opposing a measure which we are convinced would be no less detrimental to the common health than to the common wealth. We repeat, that the country is already in possession of laws which require but a little revision and simplification (but the hands must be pure that undertake the task) to be made perfectly efficient for the removal of nuisances (a rude expression of the common law for what are now more elegantly spoken of as "causes injurious to public health")—laws which are in full operation, though the fact is not adverted to, because it is so familiar, and is carefully kept out of sight by the promoters of Mr. Chadwick's job.

THE subject of summary convictions by magistrates, and of commitments in the nature of convictions, was fully discussed in the recent case in error of Lindsay v. Leigh.*

The case came before the Court of Error on a bill of exceptions tendered at the trial of an action of trespass for false imprisonment, brought by the plaintiff below against the defendant. The plaintiff had been committed by a warrant of the defendant (a justice of the peace) under the Master and Servant's Act, 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, for having unlawfully absented himself from his master's service. The warrant was clearly defective, for not stating that the contract was in writing or that the service was entered upon, and therefore the plaintiff was discharged from prison on habeas corpus. The defendant put in evidence a conviction, drawn up after the discharge; and the substantial question on which the judgment proceeded was, whether the warrant in this case could, according to the general doctrine, be cured by the conviction? The Court held, that it could not, as the warrant under this statute was either an order, as they seemed to consider it to be, or was in the nature of a conviction; but, in either case, it was the only instrument which the Legislature intended to exist: no conviction, properly so called, was required or authorised by the statute, and, therefore, the legality of the imprisonment, it was held, must depend on the legality and sufficiency of the warrant or order alone.

The question turned on the construction of the 3rd section of the act, (4 Geo. 4, c. 34), whereby, if any servant in husbandry, &c., having contracted in writing to serve, shall not enter into the service, or having entered, shall absent himself before the term of service is completed &c., it shall be lawful for a justice of the peace, &c., upon complaint made upon oath, &c., to issue his warrant for apprehending such servant; and if it shall appear that such servant has broken his contract, "it shall and may be lawful for such justice to commit him to the house of correction, there to remain and be at hard labour, for a reasonable time not exceeding three months, and to abate a proportionable part of his wages for such time, or in lieu thereof, to punish the offender, by abating the whole or any part of his wages, or to discharge such servant from his contract; which discharge shall be given under the hand and seal of such justice gratis."

There is an acknowledged distinction between an order and a conviction, (per Bayley, J., in King v. Pain, 7 D. & R. 683), e.g. the evidence must be set out in the latter though not in the former; and the only criterion afforded by the cases for distinguishing when penal proceedings are to be considered as orders and when as convictions, is to be found in the language of the statute under which the commitment takes place. (See Paley on Convictions, 3rd edit., p. 134). Thus, in Rex v. Bisset, (Burn's Just., 29th edit., p. 287; S. C., Sayer, 304), Denison, J., said, "I understood from Lord Hardwicke in the case of R. v. Lloyd, (2 Stra. 996), that his ground of the difference was founded upon the expression of the statute, and not upon the penalty; as where the words of the statute are, 'of which he shall be convicted,' it is to be construed as a conviction."

It will be observed there are no such words in the above statute of George the Fourth: and the context as to the abating of wages, and the discharge from the contract, shews that an order is all that would be required.

In some cases the warrant under this statute has been held to be a conviction, or in the nature of one, but in all it has been regarded as the final and only instrument required, and, therefore, not capable of being cured by a subsequent conviction. The stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, is in pari materia, and a commitment under that act was held to be one and the same thing with the conviction. (R. v. The Justices of Stafford, 12 East, 572).

* On the 2nd of February last.

In Johnson v. Reid, (6 Mee. & W. 128), Parke, B., said, with reference to a commitment under the 4 Geo. 4. c. 34, "It does not appear here there was any conviction, and that is not required by the statute. This is a commitment which was intended by the act to operate as a conviction."

In Gray's case, (2 D. & L. 539), where the commitment under this statute concluded with the words "I do convict," Patteson, J., said, "If a statute says that an offence is committed by certain acts, and authorises a magistrate to commit and punish for that offence, I cannot consider that an instrument by which the magistrate says that the party was brought before him and convicted, is anything else but a conviction."

And, in Hammond's case, (2 New Sess. Cas. p. 397), where the instrument returned to a habeas corpus, after stating the complaint for absence of service, proceeded thus, "We do, therefore, convict the said J. H. of the said offence in pursuance of the statute," it was held, that it must be taken to be both a conviction and a commitment, and it was decided to be bad as the former, for omitting to set out the evidence. Patteson, J., there said, "The difficulty in this case arises partly from the act of Parliament and partly from the form of the document. The act of Parliament does not say anything about the power of the magistrates to convict; it does not use the word 'conviction;' it only says, on being satisfied of the fact, the magistrates may commit for a certain time, or may mulct the party in his wages, or discharge him from his situation." In the case of Re Tordoff, (1 New Sess. Cas. 171), where the warrant of commitment under this act did not recite any conviction, and no conviction was returned, it was held that it should appear in the commitment that the magistrate had done all that was required to make the conviction lawful, and as it did not clearly appear on its face that the witnesses in support of the charge had been examined in the presence of the prisoner, it was decided to be bad.

The case of Lindsay v. Leigh appears to establish, by the solemn decision of a Court of Error, that a warrant of commitment under 4 Geo. 4. c. 34, whether it be considered as an order of magistrates, or as a document in the nature of a conviction, is the only instrument required by the statute, and that, in such a case, it is not allowable to supply the defects of the warrant by a subsequent valid conviction.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

London, Feb. 11, 1848.

SIR,—In THE JURIST of the 29th ultimo, (Par. p. 22), there is an article entitled "Agreement—Par-Evidence to explain Ambiguity;" commenting on the recent case of Goldshede v. Swan, (1 Exch. Rep. 154), and written apparently under the impression that some new doctrine was laid down by the Court of Exchequer as to the receipt of extrinsic evidence.

The rules laid down on this subject by Vice-Chancellor Wigram having been generally received as indisputably right, it becomes of great importance to see one of the superior courts has thrown out anything calculated to bring them into doubt. But, having been present at the decision of Goldshede v. Swan, I have no hesitation in declaring, (and in this I am fortified by the concurrence of others), that the impression to which I have alluded is an erroneous one—induced probably by a want of fullness in the report. I take it that the principle on which that case was decided was that all the material facts are admissible in evidence in order to enable the Court to understand a will, deed, or contract, by putting itself as near as may be in the situation of the parties; and that so using the facts to guarantee in that case was capable of being read so as to be valid. For, no advance having been made at the time of the signature of it, the expression "having advanced," which might be understood as referring to the time of giving the guarantee, or to the time when the defendants were to pay [that is, in consideration of your having now already on this day advanced, I will pay; or in consideration of your having then (at the time of the guaranteed payment) and on that day advanced, I will pay] was to be understood in the latter sense. If the guarantee had been "in consideration of your having yesterday or not already on this day advanced," this could not have been done; and according to the established rules of law, it can only be done where the instrument is capable of being understood in different senses, and the concomitant facts shew in which of the two the parties meant to use the words. I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

M. B.

LONDON, MARCH 18, 1848.

WERE it not for a doubt implied, but not actually expressed, in a case very recently before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, (Swallow v. Wallingford, 15th March, 1848), we should have conceived it to be now perfectly clear law, that a covenant by a solicitor with another, or by an articulated clerk with his master, that he will not practice within certain limits as to time or locality, or both, is good. But in the case to which we refer the Court seemed to doubt,—we say seemed to doubt only, because the Court expressly guarded itself against being understood to have given any opinion; and, from the turn which the case took upon equitable grounds, it became unnecessary that any opinion should be pronounced on the legal question.

The leading case upon this subject at law is Bunn v. Guy, (4 T. R. 190). There, the agreement was, that in consideration of money to be paid by Bunn and Guy to Carpenter, Carpenter was to make over to Bunn and Guy his business as an attorney within London and 150 miles thence, Carpenter covenanting that he would not at any time practise within those limits, and would permit Bunn and Guy to practise for one year under the style of "Carpenter, Bunn, & Guy," and to use Carpenter's name in such firm for one year more, if necessary. The question was, in a case sent out of Chancery, whether such agreement was legal, so that Carpenter could recover against Bunn and Guy; and the whole Court of King's Bench certified that it was. That this decision was contrary to Lord Eldon's opinion there cannot be much reason to doubt, if we turn to the expressions used by his Lordship in Candler v. Candler, (Jac. 225), in which, however, the point did not require decision. "I have thought," says Lord Eldon, in that case, (p. 231), "that, consistently with the policy of the law, agreements could not be made, by which they contract to recommend those who succeed them. I doubted whether professional men could be recommended, not for skill and knowledge in their profession, but for a sum of money paid and advanced. I know that this would rip up many transactions, and I was happy that the Court of Queen's Bench was of a different opinion, though I never could entirely reconcile myself to their doctrine."

His Lordship, however, does not appear ever to have gone beyond an extra-judicial complaint against the doctrine of Bunn v. Guy. In Bozon v. Farlow, (1 Mer. 459), Sir W. Grant seemed to share Lord Eldon's antipathy to the doctrine of Bunn v. Guy, without however going so far as to assert that it was not law. But his Honor did go so far as to intimate a strong opinion that though a covenant by a solicitor, on selling his business to another, to permit the purchaser to retain the vendor's name in the firm, and to use his endeavours to influence his former clients to employ the purchaser, may be a legal covenant, it is not one which equity will interfere to enforce.

This expression of opinion was followed in a recent case of Thornbury v. Bevil, (1 You. & C. 554), where the agreement was, that the business, formerly the plaintiff's, should be carried on by the defendant solely, under their joint names. On a bill by the plaintiff for the specific performance of this agreement, the Vice-Chancellor, dismissing the bill upon grounds which rendered it unnecessary expressly to decide this point, said, "Notwithstanding the case of Bunn v. Guy, from which I do not mean to express dissent, decided as it was by judges of high authority, I am not prepared to say that it is fit that a court of equity should enforce an agreement between two solicitors, that one on retiring from the business shall permit the other to carry on the business in his name. Whether such agreement be or be not within the strict policy of the law, it may be doubtful whether this Court ought to assist it. I do not, however, rest my decision on that ground. I mention it, that it may not be thought that I see no difficulty in that part of the case."

The general question of the validity of an agreement by a solicitor for valuable consideration not to practise, with some limitation as to time or locality, was much discussed in Whittaker v. Howe, (3 Beav. 383), in which Lord Langdale, having before him the cases of Candler v. Candler and Bunn v. Guy, said, "With respect to the validity of the agreements, it is not now made a question whether attorneys and solicitors can lawfully agree to secure their clients to the attorneys and solicitors who succeed them in business." The covenant in that case was not to practise in Great Britain for twenty years, and an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from practising contrary to his covenant. In Nicholls v. Stretton, (7 Beav. 42), the covenant was by an articulated clerk, that he would not, during the period of his articles, or at any time after their expiration, be concerned as attorney for any person who had been, or should thereafter be, the client of the plaintiff, or any partner or assignee of the plaintiff. And in this case also, the Master of the Rolls treated the legality of contracts of this nature as settled, admitting that they were to some extent a restriction on trade, and a hardship upon third parties, in the way of depriving them of the services of those in whom alone they may have confidence.

It would seem, therefore, that, although successive equity judges have expressed a sort of equitable horror of Bunn v. Guy, not only none have ventured to deny that it is law, but, in several cases, its authority has been pointedly admitted, and in some acted upon.

Were it not for the cases of Whittaker v. Rowe and Nicholls v. Stretton, we should have thought that, possibly, it might be successfully argued, that, admitting the legality of such covenants as those in question, yet equity ought not to assist them by injunction, any more than by specific performance; for the doctrine of equity, with regard to aiding legal rights by injunction, is not to be taken in the affirmative, that equity holds itself always bound to prevent by injunction the infraction of a legal right, but negatively only, that it will not aid by injunction a right claimed as a legal right, unless such legal right is either actually or prima facie made out. If, therefore, a court of equity holds, as it would seem from the dicta in Bozon v. Farrow and Thornbury v. Bevil, that some at least of the covenants with which the transfer of an attorney's business is usually guarded are not covenants that equity ought to enforce directly, but should leave to be enforced at law, why should equity be called upon indirectly to enforce them by injunction? Why should it not leave to be enforced at law, a covenant of which it cannot restrain the breach, without in fact aiding the specific performance of an agreement which it does not think sufficiently equitable to deserve direct aid? This argument is not at all inconsistent with the recent decision in Dietrichsen v. Cabburn, (10 Jur. 601), which only overrules the doctrine, that an injunction could not be granted to restrain the breach of a negative covenant, being part of an agreement that the Court could not as a whole enforce, and does not at all lay down the converse rule, that the Court is bound to enjoin against the breach of a covenant admitted to be legal, if it sees equitable grounds for enforcing the substance of the agreement of which the covenant forms a protecting part.

GUARANTIE. — PAROL EVIDENCE. — GOLDSHED v. SWAN.

The writer of the article on Goldshede v. Swan (Jur., Part 2, p. 22) has to observe, in answer to the letter which appeared in the last Number of THE JURIST, that his object in noticing the case was twofold: first, to guard the student from being misled by the inaccurate dictum attributed to Pollock, C. B., that "where any written instrument is ambiguous, evidence is receivable to construe its meaning, but not to alter or vary in any manner its terms,"—a dictum which we owe, not to a want of fulness, but to an overfulness in the report; and secondly to point out the novelty, at least, of the decision in that case, which amounts to this,—that although the Statute of Frauds, as construed in Wain v. Warlters and other cases, requires that every promise to answer for the debt of another shall be in writing, and shall express on the face of the writing a good consideration for the promise; and although consideration for a promise is not good unless it is contemporaneous or executory, (except under special circumstances which did not exist in Goldshede v. Swan), yet a promise in writing which states a consideration but does not state that it is contemporaneous or executory, and therefore does not shew that it is a good consideration—is sufficient, if, in point of fact, the consideration is good. That doctrine is certainly new and important, and the anxiety of the judges (especially of Parkes, J.) to avail themselves of the very slender authority of Haigh v. Brooks and of the case of Butcher v. Swan, which is no authority at all, shews that they at least considered it to be so. To the writer's apprehension the case went further, and decided that words which plainly state an executed consideration, may have a contrary meaning given to them by parol evidence; in other words, that if the facts are sufficient to support the promise, it is no matter how inaccurately they are stated in the writing. For, the construction suggested by the Court, and more clearly by M. B., that the promise was a promise that the defendant would, in consideration of the plaintiff's having on the day of the date the guarantie made the advance, repay him, cannot be reconciled with the language of the instrument, which expressly stated the consideration as being a consideration for the promise, and not for the act promised to be done, and, as the promise was not future, the consideration was necessarily past. The words were, "I, in consideration of your having this day advanced to V. D. the sum of 750*l.*, we hereby jointly and severally undertake to pay the same on" &c., not "we promise that, in consideration of your having advanced 750*l.*, we will pay the same on" &c., words which might possibly be strained to the suggested construction. This is a verbal distinction; but words form the substance of the question.

The writing stated all the circumstances of the consideration correctly except the date. Under the most favourable construction it did not state the date at all, for without the parol evidence no one pretended to know the true date. The date, then, was supplied by parol evidence. The omission to state the date was therefore unimportant. If unimportant, it could only be so for this reason,—that the consideration was sufficiently identified by the other circumstances. If so, is a sufficiently certain description "is not damaged by the addition of a "false demonstration," — a false statement of the date would have done no harm. Yet the Court expressly said, that, if the words had been "in consideration of your having yesterday advanced," &c., the evidence would have been inadmissible, for it would have contradicted the writing. But evidence exposing a false demonstration is admitted, though it contradicts the writing. Why? Because it contradicts it in an immaterial particular. The Court of Exchequer, then, say, that a statement of the date in the writing cannot be contradicted, because the date is a material fact; but they decide, that it is not necessary to state the date at all, and that the date is, therefore, an immaterial fact. At the same time that they decide this, they decline to recognise the validity of the promise until the date of the consideration is shewn, thus deciding in the same breath that the date is both unimportant and essential.

To put the argument into another form: — The writing either stated the relation in point of time between the consideration and the promise, or it did not. If it did not state the time, then evidence was received to supply an omission in the writing, (in opposition to Wain v. Warlters), and all that was said by the Court as to ambiguity and explanation was mere impertinence. The writing, then, did, in the apprehension of the Court, in terms state the time. The statement was either precise or ambiguous. If precise, it was either true or false. If true, the parol evidence was not needed in explanation; if false, it was admitted to contradict the writing. But the Court disclaimed the reception of evidence to contradict the writing, and they expressly received it for the purpose of explanation. The Court, therefore, thought that the statement was in terms ambiguous, and they received evidence to explain the ambiguity; that is to say, the Court received evidence to explain a patent ambiguity, and they left unexplained the grounds on which they thought that the case was not governed by Lord Bacon's rule: that "ambiguitas patens is never holpen by averment." This being the result of Goldshede v. Swan, the writer conceives that he was justified in suggesting that it involved some new doctrines, either as to the receipt of extrinsic evidence, or as to the construction of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds.

It is at least a remarkable result of that case, that an enactment which was made to exclude parol evidence of certain contracts, and which declares that no such contract shall be enforced unless it is in writing, may be satisfied by a writing which, on the face of it, requires the aid of parol evidence to establish its validity.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—John Fish Stansfield, of Accrington, Lancashire; John Collis, of Cannock, Staffordshire.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, has appointed Charles Thomas Woosnam, of Newtown, in the county of Montgomery, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Montgomery, also in and for the counties of Radnor and Salop.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Robert Baynes Armstrong, Esq., for the Borough of Lancaster, in the room of Samuel Gregson, Esq., whose election has been declared void.

The Queen has been pleased to nominate and appoint the Honourable Charles Edward Pepys to be Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in the room of Leonard Edmunds, Esq., resigned.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

If a suit be commenced in any of the courts of Westminster concerning matters arising in India, the Court may award a writ in the nature of a mandamus for the examination of witnesses in that country; and, upon the examination being returned, it shall be allowed, and read as evidence at the trial. (13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44; Grillard v. Hague, 1 B. & B. 519; S. C., 4 Moore, 313; Reg. v. Douglas, 16 Law Journ., Q. B., 417).

The provisions of 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, only extended to causes of action which arose in India, (Francisco v. Gilmore, 1 B. & P. 177), the Court having no power to grant a mandamus for matters arising in England or other countries. The powers and provisions of that act, however, have been extended by a recent statute (1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 1) to all colonies, islands, plantations, and places under the King's dominions in foreign parts, and to the judges of the courts therein. This act, after reciting that great difficulties and delays are often experienced, and sometimes a failure of justice takes place in actions depending in courts of law, by reason of the want of a competent power and authority in the said Courts to order and enforce the examination of witnesses, where the same may be required, before the trial of a cause; and that, by the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, intituled "An Act for the establishing certain Regulations for the better Management of the Affairs of the East India Company, as well in India as in Europe," certain powers are given and provisions made for the examination of witnesses in India in the cases therein mentioned; and that it is expedient to extend such powers; enacts, "that all and every the powers, authorities, provisions, and matters contained in the said recited act relating to the examination of witnesses in India shall be, and the same are hereby extended to all colonies, islands, plantations, and places under the dominion of his Majesty in foreign parts, and to the judges of the several courts therein, and to all actions depending in any of his Majesty's courts of law at Westminster, in what place or country soever the cause of action may have arisen, and whether the same may have arisen within the jurisdiction of the Court, to the judges whereof the writ or commission may be directed, or elsewhere, when it shall appear that the examination of witnesses under a writ of commission, issued in pursuance of the authority hereby given, will be necessary or conducive to the due administration of justice in the matter wherein such writ shall be applied for." So that now, although the cause of action arose elsewhere than in India, the Court have power to issue a mandamus or commission into the country where evidence may be required under this act. (Bain v. De Vary, 3 Dow, 516; S. C., 1 Gale, 52). The act does not apply to Scotland. (Wainwright v. Bland, 3 Dow, 653; S. C., 1 Gale, 103). The Courts of Exchequer and Common Pleas have the same power as the Court of King's Bench, since 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, to issue a mandamus for examination of witnesses abroad. (Savage v. Binney, 2 Dow, 643; Grillard v. Hoge, 1 B. & B. 519). And where an indictment or information is exhibited in the Court of Queen's Bench for an offence committed in India, the Court is authorised, on motion, to grant a mandamus to any court of judicature, or the governor, &c. of the country where the offence was committed, to obtain proof of the matters charged. (Rex v. Jones, 3 East, 31; Rex v. Holland, 4 T. R. 662; 42 Geo. 3, c. 85; 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 43, and 24 Geo. 3, c. 25, ss. 78, 81; Tidd's Pract. 813, 9th ed.; Chitty's Archb. 237, 7th ed.; Reg. v. Douglas, 16 Law Journ., Q. B., 417).

Where the submission to arbitration is under a pu^t

lic act, it may be enforced by mandamus, but otherwise not. (Over Keld Inclosure Act, H. 38 Geo. 3, K. B.; Tidd. 844, 9th ed.; and Rez v. Washbrooke, 7 D. & R. 221). And where a reference to arbitration has proceeded under an act of Parliament, the Court will grant a mandamus to the arbitrator under it to appoint an umpire. (Rez v. Goodrich, 3 Smith's Rep. 388). On a motion respecting an award of a commissioner under an inclosure act, the Court said, "We may punish upon this, if there be any corruption, or enforce its execution by mandamus; but we are not to interpret or set aside these awards upon complaint of their obscurity." (Over Keld Inclosure Act, H. 38 Geo. 3, K. B.; Tidd. 844, 9th ed.; and see Rez v. Washbrooke, 7 D. & R. 221).

Where a depositor in a savings bank called upon the trustees for his deposit, which was not paid in consequence of an embezzlement committed, and the trustees refused to appoint an arbitrator under 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, s. 45, to whom the matter might be referred, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them, for no action lies, and the only mode of proceeding is by arbitration. (Rez v. The Mildenhall Savings Bank, 6 Adol. & Ell. 952; Rez v. The Cheadle Savings Bank, 1 Adol. & Ell. 323; Rez v. The Witham Savings Bank, 1 Adol. & Ell. 321; and see Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394). But if it be a matter of dispute among persons professing to apply on behalf of a body of depositors, whether the applicants be entitled to represent the body, the Court will not interfere by mandamus, for the directors are not compellable to appoint an arbitrator under the statute in such circumstances. (Rez v. The Witham Savings Bank, 1 Adol. & Ell. 321). So, if it appear by a rule of the society that the applicant was prevented from substantiating his claim by reason of the lapse of time, the Court will not grant a mandamus. (Rez v. The Northwich Savings Bank, 9 Adol. & Ell. 729; 1 Per. & D. 477; 8 Law J., N. S., M. C., 24).

And it should seem, that unless in cases of arbitration founded on some statute, or where the written submission to arbitration has been made a rule of Court under the General Arbitration Act, (9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15), the proceedings would be considered as a mere private transaction between the parties, in respect of which, as we have already seen, no writ of mandamus would lie, for the Court of Queen's Bench will not issue that prerogative writ in aid of mere private contracts or transactions. (1 Chitty's General Practice of the Law, part 2, 789).

Where a gaoler refused to deliver up the body of a person who had died while a prisoner in execution in his custody, to the executors of the deceased, unless they would satisfy certain claims made against the deceased by the gaoler, this Court issued a peremptory mandamus in the first instance, commanding that the body should be delivered up. (Rez v. Fox, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 246*).

If an indictment under the 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, be found by the grand jury at the assizes for a forcible entry and detainer, it is in the discretion of the judge of assize whether he will grant a warrant of restitution or not. Therefore, where a judge refused to grant the warrant, but on application granted a rule nisi, which was, on shewing cause, discharged, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the judge commanding him to issue such warrant. (Rez v. Harland and Others, 8 Adol. & Ell. 826). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to the sheriff to issue execution for a debt recovered in his county court, the sheriff having previously set aside the judgment, conceiving it to be erroneous. (Eldridge v. Fletcher, 1 Harr. & W. 199). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, requiring them to pay a poor's-rate in respect of lands held by them under the Crown. (Ex parte Reeve, 5 Dowl. P. C. 668). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to an insurance company commanding them to transfer shares standing in the name of a bankrupt to that of his assignees. (Rez v. The London Assurance Company, 5 B. & Ald. 899). Nor will a mandamus be granted to remove proceedings by justices, in order to bring them judicially under review where certain statutes regulating them have restricted their removal by certiorari. (Rez v. The Justices of the Peace Riding of Yorkshire, 1 Adol. & Ell. 563).

Although the Court will, in some cases, grant a mandamus where an indictment will lie, yet, if an indictment will afford as beneficial a remedy, they will not interfere by mandamus. Therefore, a mandamus will not lie to the treasurer of a county to pay over a sum of money ordered to be paid by the quarter sessions, because there is another remedy by indictment. (Rez v. Bristow, 6 T. R. 168; see Rez v. Robinson, 2 B. & 797). Nor does it lie to pay money allowed to a witness by the borough court of sessions. (Rez v. The Treasury of Surrey, 1 Chit. Rep. 650; see Rez v. Johnson, 4 M. & S. 515). For the disobedience of an order of sessions, an indictment lies. Nor does a mandamus lie to compel the treasurer of a district to pay the expenses of a prosecution for misdemeanor in obedience to the order of the court of assize, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23, the proper remedy being to indict. (Rez v. Jeyes, 3 Adol. & Ell. 416; Rez v. Erle, 2 B. & 1197). The Court will not grant a mandamus to compel a party to pay money to the treasurer of a borough under the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4 c. 76, s. 92, unless the application be made by the treasurer, or after he has been required to demand the payment, though the party applying be ultimately entitled to the money. (Rez v. Frost, 8 Adol. & Ell. 822).

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported Cases; the Statutes to the present time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work with which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupilage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 766.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

LONDON, MARCH 25, 1848.

It seems that an endeavour is being made by a considerable body of ecclesiastical persons, to persuade the present Archbishop of Canterbury practically to disregard the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Reg. v. The Archbishop of Canterbury, by refusing to consecrate the Bishop whose election gave rise to that case. This proceeding raises the question of the policy of the law as it now stands. If that question were purely a religious one, or purely a political one, it would not find admission in the pages of THE JURIST. But it is susceptible of being viewed as a question of constitutional law, and of being discussed with reference to those principles which regulate our constitutional institutions, so far as they depend upon the extent to which the general scheme of our laws places given bodies under, or frees them from, legal responsibilities. The question, viewed under this aspect, is, whether the Crown ought to have the power given to it by the stat. 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, or whether it is not rather fitting and good for the commonwealth, that the Church should, through its prelates, have a right to inquire into the fitness of any appointment made by the Crown, before confirming it; and of refusing to confirm, if it should shew reasonable grounds against the appointment.

It seems first necessary to establish, that a power of imposing a veto on the appointment of a Bishop is, for all practical purposes, as nearly as possible, equivalent to a power of appointing; for, although it is not to be supposed that any exalted public officer, mindful of his high duties or careful of his fame, will use a power of imposing a veto so factiously as to refuse to ratify every appointment proposed for his sanction until his own nominee is presented to him, yet, in times of difficulty and conflict, when men range themselves in parties, and it is an object with a party not so much to exclude a particular man from office, as to exclude any men representing a particular set of ideas and principles, the power of imposing a veto becomes, in fact, the power of appointing; because the person possessing it may well, without incurring the imputation of personal predilection, and therefore without apparent factiousness, exercise his power so as to exclude any man not representing the ideas that he favours.

If, for example, the Church were, as it is supposed to be, divided into two great parties, the Archbishop for the time being would naturally desire to see Bishops of his own way of thinking; and an Archbishop of either party might, not only without exposing himself to imputations of factiousness, but with great accession to his reputation for zeal and religion, refuse to confirm the appointment of any Bishop holding opinions which the Archbishop either openly professed himself to consider, or secretly held to be, unsound and pernicious to the well-being of the Church. So that an Archbishop would, in fact, by means of the power of imposing a veto, have the power of filling the bench of Bishops with men holding the particular doctrines favoured by him. It is, therefore, clear, that whenever there is a disunion in the Church, manifesting itself in the existence of two or more considerable parties struggling for ascendancy in the Christian community, that is, precisely in those critical periods in which it is likely that power may be converted to dangerous purposes, a power of imposing a veto is, in effect, a power of appointing.

It becomes, therefore, material to consider, quite irrespectively of any general question whether the Church should at any time be intrusted with a power superior to the temporal authority, a question which it is not our province to discuss, whether there is more danger in intrusting the Crown with an independent power of creating Bishops, or in placing in the hands of the Archbishop a power of controlling the exercise of the royal authority, which may in critical times cease to be a veto, and become practically a power of appointing.

In any discussion of this sort, care must be taken to avoid the confusion of ideas which arises from attaching an improper meaning to the expression "the Crown." Men are apt sometimes, influenced probably by their recollections of the long struggles recorded in the history of this country of the Commons, for the abridgment of the powers of the Sovereign, to consider the Crown as something necessarily different from the nation—a sort of separate estate, having a separate interest of its own, hostile to that of the nation. But, in the eye of the law, at least, the Crown represents the interest of the entire people, at least in all those cases where the conflict is between several sections of the people. When, therefore, it is discussed whether the Crown or the Archbishop should have the power of regulating the appointment of Bishops, the discussion is in reality whether such regulation should be in the hands of the Church represented by its spiritual head, or of the people represented by the temporal head of both clergy and laity.

Now, it is most material to consider in all these cases of conflicting claims to the possession of authority, not so much what kind of functionary is personally most fit to be intrusted with it, as what kind of functionary is most subjected to the reasonable regulations of constitutional rule; and the question here is, therefore, whether the Crown or the Archbishop is most subjected to the control of constitutional rule in the exercise of the authority under discussion.

Now, let it be recollected what is the position of the Crown in the matter of making a Bishop. In the first place, the Crown itself, as the supreme head of the Church, as depending for much of its influence and power on the adhesion of the Church, has a sufficiently strong interest in not filling the episcopal bench with unfit men. Next, the exercise of the authority of the Crown is but nominally vested in the Crown. It is really vested in the responsible advisers of the Crown. It may happen occasionally that the Sovereign forces his personal choice on his minister; but every one knows that, generally speaking, every important political power vested in the Crown, is exercised under the advice of its responsible minister.

THE Crown has, therefore, constitutionally speaking, no opinions or predilections; but in all important exercises of power will give effect to that class of opinions or principles which is represented by the minister for the time being; in other words, to that class of opinions or principles which is for the time being favoured by the nation, represented by a parliamentary majority. Now what are the dangers that it may be said may result from the vesting of such a power in the Crown, so to be exercised? They will range themselves under the following heads:—

Firstly. It may be said that the Crown may personally abuse its powers, by insisting upon the appointment and confirmation of a person grossly objectionable.

Secondly. It may be said that the minister may, for his own purposes, advise and insist upon the appointment of such a person; or Thirdly. It may be said that danger may result from the minister and the Crown being made the slaves of popular caprice and dictation, and that improper persons may be forced into the episcopal body by what is sometimes termed a "tyrant majority" in Parliament.

As to the first danger, the check upon it is plain enough. Assuming, and it is not a very violent assumption, that the nation does not lose its senses, and that statesmen of reputation do not lose all prudence and self-respect, it is quite clear that if the Sovereign of this country were to insist on forcing on her ministers a Bishop so grossly unfit for the sacred office as to outrage, or even to be extremely obnoxious to, the Christian community over which she reigns, she would be unable to conduct her government; for the simple reason, that she would be unable to find men of any repute or influence with the country to take upon themselves the responsibility of becoming her advisers.

As to the second danger, that a minister may, for his own purposes, advise and insist upon the appointment of a person grossly unfit; there is abundant safeguard against this also. No minister would so act who was not prepared to stake his official existence upon his act; and if his selection were, indeed, violently offensive to the community, he would certainly be expelled from office the first time that he met Parliament. A minister may make foolish appointments: he may, to some extent, make positively bad appointments; but no minister could insult the nation by an appointment grossly flagitious, and more particularly in the matter of its religious feelings, and retain the confidence of Parliament.

The third supposed danger is founded upon two assumptions, one of which at least cannot be supported. To warrant the anticipation of any such danger, it must be assumed, first, that the democracy is necessarily capricious and wrong-headed; and, secondly, that Parliament represents the democracy. It is not necessary to inquire into the truth of the first assumption, because the second is clearly not supported by the facts. No one who knows anything of the composition of Parliament will venture to assert that the democracy is particularly represented in Parliament, that is, not in the sense of its will being directly consulted or considered. We do not mean of course to say that Parliament in no degree represents the interests of the democracy. It does so in so far as representing the educated and middle classes of the people; it consults as bound up with the welfare of those classes, and, indeed, of the whole political fabric, the interests of the vast labouring multitude. But except in moments of great political excitement, such as occur probably not more than a few times in a generation, it would be ridiculous to assert that Parliament is moved by the democracy. The idea, therefore, of the Crown or its ministers being in general dictated to or swayed through Parliament by the caprices of the multitude, is without foundation.

We are not aware of any other danger that can even be supposed likely to result to the state, from the possession by the Crown of the absolute power of creating Bishops, subjected, as it is in its exercise, to the control of constitutional rule; and open as are those who assist the Crown in its exercise to the regular and legitimate correction afforded by the established powers of Parliament.

Now let us look at the present position of an Archbishop, supposing him to possess that power of interference with the authority of the Crown which we have shewn would be, at the periods when alone its exercise is important, equivalent to a direct power of selecting a Bishop from a particular party.

The Archbishop is not, like the Sovereign, required by the constitution to have, or at least to act, upon no personal opinion. He is, like other persons, free, and, therefore, in conscience bound to act upon his personal convictions; and whereas it would be constitutionally impossible for the Sovereign to force his personal opinions into action, (except in cases where the other component parts of the Legislature are equally divided), it would, on the contrary, be almost a crime in an Archbishop not to use his authority for the furtherance of those principles and opinions in matters of religion and church government, which in his conscience he believed to be sound. If, therefore, the Archbishop were of a particular religious party, it would be his duty, as it undoubtedly would be his pleasure, to fill the episcopal bench, to the utmost of his power, with Bishops of that party, without reference to whether the majority of the Christian community over which he spiritually ruled, affected or detested that party; and what would be the check upon him on the part of the community, whether lay or ecclesiastical? The constitution furnishes none that we are aware of. The Crown has no power to remove an Archbishop, even for misconduct; of course it could not remove him for doing that which could, at the worst, only be considered an error of judgment. As a peer of Parliament an Archbishop might, no doubt, be impeached; but in Parliament, also, he could not be constitutionally impeached except for misdeeds.

There is no tribunal, no legitimate authority, no constitutional influence, that we are aware of, which can be brought to bear upon an Archbishop, to restrain him from so exercising his veto as to force the Crown into appointing men only of the principles favoured by himself.

Such a power, so unsubjected to constitutional control, is one that is manifestly most dangerous to be possessed in any free state by any public functionary. It is one not intrusted to the head of the state—on what ground can it be claimed by any inferior functionary? But then it will be said, that, if the law were altered so as to give to the Archbishop a power of refusing to confirm the appointment of a Bishop, then of course the Legislature would take care to provide some constitutional and regular mode of proceeding by which the Archbishop might be restrained from abusing his power. The answer is, that from the nature of the transaction, and of the archiepiscopal functions, such restraint is scarcely possible. A restraint by way of judicial proceeding, such as that which may be taken against the inferior clergy in the Archbishop's Court, can of course only be applicable to the correction of offences,—breaches of duty of some kind. It would be an absurdity in theory, and an impossibility in practice to subject any ecclesiastical functionary to judicial process for having exercised his functions conscientiously and not in breach of any positive rule, however pernicious to the State such exercise might be. A direct parliamentary proceeding that could be devised for the purpose, would be necessarily in the nature of a judicial proceeding, and open to the same objection, namely, that it could only of its own nature reach a delictum. It would, we apprehend, be equally impossible by any act of Parliament to provide any indirect check upon a mischievous, but not criminal, exercise of authority by the Archbishop, unless the whole nature and constitution of the archiepiscopal character is to be altered. It would be preposterous to make an Archbishop removable like a minister of the Crown, or in any other way to subject him to the pressure of Parliamentary majorities, or to any of those indirect influences, exercised by the people through Parliament, which operate upon persons exercising purely political functions. It would be equally preposterous to make him removable at the pleasure of the Crown, either with or without the advice of ministers. Nor would it do to give the Crown any power of controlling the veto of the Archbishop, because that would be but just bringing things back to the state in which they now are. In fine, we think any person who will set himself to reflect upon the means which would be available in the hands of the Legislature, for subjecting the Archbishop to constitutional control in the exercise of his power of imposing a veto, will arrive at the conclusion that Parliament could not devise any such control capable of being practically worked. The result is, that the Archbishop must be left as he is, without any power of opposing a veto to the order of the Crown to confirm and consecrate, or that he must have such power uncontrollable by any constitutional check, and subject to no other checks than those that may result from personal discretion, or the fear of popular violence,—checks which we apprehend wise and good men would not desire to rely upon.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., L. Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the Acknowledgments of Deeds to be executed by Married Women:—William Crawford Newby, of Stockton-upon-Tees, in the county of Durham, in and for the county of Durham, and for the North Riding of the county of York; James Galloway, of Prescott, in the county of Lancaster, in and for the county of Lancaster; and Anthony Horrex Roger Mickfield, of Stoke Ferry, in the county of Norfolk, in and for the county of Norfolk.

Review.

The Life of Lord Chancellor Hardwicke; with Selections from his Correspondence, Diaries, Speeches, and Judgments. By GEORGE HARRIS, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 3 Vols. London, 1847.

[Mason, and Stevens & Norton.]

The life of Lord Hardwicke must always be a subject of interest at least to the lawyer, as the life of one, certainly, of the greatest of English lawyers,—perhaps of the greatest lawyer in the annals of English jurisprudence. We think it questionable, however, if the reader of these volumes, notwithstanding the “iteration” with which he is assured that Lord Hardwicke was a great—a very great lawyer and judge, would discover the fact from the evidence, bulky enough, certainly, here presented to him. The author does, indeed, inform his readers, that it has been asserted that Lord Hardwicke’s fame as Chancellor has suffered from the loose and inadequate manner in which his judgments are reported. But he has not informed them, that one at least of Lord Hardwicke’s most important and elaborate judgments,—a judgment which has been characterised by Sir Edward Sugden as one of the ablest judgments ever delivered,—has been given to the world in a very perfect state. We refer to his judgment in the case of Garth v. Cotton, which is published in Dickens’s Reports, p. 183, from his Lordship’s own written copy. There are also outlines of the same judgment in 3 Atkyns, 751, and in 1 Vesey, (senior), 546—sufficient, no doubt, as reports for technical purposes, but, like most of the reports of that period, sadly inadequate as memorials of the abilities displayed by the judge. The reader who may wish to know something of what Lord Hardwicke really was as a judge, may also turn, with advantage, to his judgment in the case of Willoughby v. Willoughby, and that in the case of Casborne v. Inglis, two of his most learned and luminous judgments, which have likewise had the advantage of having been printed from his Lordship’s own MS. notes: the former in 1 Term Rep. 765; and the latter in 2 Jac. & Walk. 194. No one can read these judgments without obtaining a more clear and adequate conception of Lord Hardwicke’s merits as a lawyer and a judge than he could acquire from the perusal of thirty such volumes as those either of Lord Campbell or Mr. Harris. We may add, that this judge did more than any single individual has ever done, partly to create and wholly to reduce to order and principle, the refined and complicated at least, if not always beneficent system, by which rights of property are governed in equity. If Lord Campbell and Mr. Harris, before they again write or speak anything about Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, would condescend diligently to study the reports of his decisions and judgments, they would at least discover the profundity of their present ignorance, and would probably either remain silent, or write both more to the point and in better English than they have yet done.

But the life of Lord Hardwicke furnishes matter of other and perhaps deeper reflection than could arise merely from the consideration of the merits of this greatest of lawyers and judges. We have seen him called somewhere the “prince of pettifoggers.” Never was an appellation more unjustly applied. A pettifogger he was not in any sense in which we commonly understand the term. He was, in truth and in strictness, a great lawyer and a great judge. We know of none that can be placed on the same level with him on the English judgment-seat. But there is another aspect under which we have to regard him. An English Chancellor, at least one who filled that post so long as Lord Hardwicke, comes before us in the character not merely of judge and lawyer, but of statesman.

To this character, too, indeed, we find Lord Hardwicke bringing the same evenness of temper and clearness of mind to which he owed his success as a lawyer. However, when we look closely at the result, we find that there are some important things wanting. Whether the shortcoming arose from defects in the original structure of the mind, or that the long attention to particular studies and pursuits had exercised a certain influence upon the mind and temper, we cannot say, but the result is really a curious phenomenon. We find a man with such powers of mind as we have described Lord Hardwicke as exhibiting in his judgments, acting for many years not merely in concert with, but in subordination to a creature with absolutely not much more of the reasoning faculty than a vivacious baboon,—we need hardly say, we mean his grace the Duke of Newcastle. Even George the Second, though not certainly overburdened with what distinguishes the ζῶον λογικόν from the other beasts, shewed sense in his appreciation of Newcastle:—“You see,” he said, “that I am compelled to take the Duke of Newcastle to be my minister, who is not fit to be chamberlain in the smallest court of Germany.” (Coxe’s Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole, vol. 1, p. 329).

To ambitious men, who may be inclined to repine when they reflect on the smallness of their chance of ever filling the high judicial office so long and so worthily filled by Lord Hardwicke, it may afford some consolation to behold how small, as a politician, appears this great judge and lawyer. He might, indeed, help to control, by his sense and temper, the childish irritability and petulance of the weak and vain man whom his rank and fortune and Whig connexion had elevated into a first minister; but for a long series of years we find him as a subordinate aiding and abetting in a system of policy which was at once involving his country in disgrace, and overwhelming it with taxation, and with debt that entailed a burthen of taxation on successive generations of Englishmen.

It is a relief to return to the contemplation of Lord Hardwicke’s judicial character, thus sketched by the discriminating pencil of the late Edmund Plunkett Burke*, in one of the admirable biographies which enriched the old Law Magazine†:—

“His integrity no one called in question; his talents were beyond the reach of censure; the wisdom of his decrees was the theme of universal eulogy. . . . In framing his judgments, Lord Hardwicke appears always

* He died soon after his appointment to the Chief Justiceship of Ste. Lucie. Mr. Harris refers to this article, as being “from the pen of an eminent judge who was as remarkable for the impartiality of his opinions, as for the ability with which he discharged his important duties.” (Vol. 2, p. 261). It is odd to speak of even the Chief Justice of one of the Windward Islands as an eminent judge, and perhaps Mr. Harris, (whose historical knowledge is not profound), wrote under the impression that the author of “Thoughts on a Regicide Peace” had contributed to the Law Magazine as well as to the Annual Register, and had presided in the King’s Bench at the trial of an action against Warren Hastings. With like felicity he changes Cibber into Pope, and parody into twaddle. Speaking of Murray, “In 1837 Pope thus referred to his practice at the bar of the House of Peers:—

“Graced as thou art with all the power of words,
So known, so honoured in the House of Lords.”

“His chambers were at this time at No. 5, King’s Bench-walk, Temple, to which allusion is made by Pope in another of his poems.” We supply the quotation from the other poem:—

“Persuasion tips his tongue whence’er he talks,
And he has chambers in the King’s Bench Walks.”

† Law Magazine, vol. 3, p. 72; reprinted, with the best of the other biographies which appeared in that periodical, in Mr. Welsby’s “Lives of eminent English Judges.”

to have been anxious to bring the case within the scope of some broad general principle. This, however, he never effected by means of forced interpretations or fanciful analogies. He was always careful to support his opinion by the authority of legal precedents, in the selection and application of which he was particularly happy. Again, his regard for principle never betrayed him into the dangerous practice of giving his own judgments in such loose and general terms as might extend their authority too far; it was his invariable practice to express himself in the most guarded terms, and to mention distinctly the qualifications and restrictions with which he meant his opinion to be received, so that his judgments were effectually prevented from acquiring as precedents a wider application than it was his original design to give them. For illustration, and in the absence of other authorities for a guide in his arguments, he frequently had recourse to the civil law, with which, like his illustrious contemporary, Mansfield, though not, perhaps, in so great a degree, he had familiarised himself, and for which, in common with all who have ever made it their study, he entertained the highest respect. It might possibly be in part the result of his acquaintance with the writings of the ancient civilians, that his judicial arguments were peculiarly distinguished by the qualities for which they had been deservedly praised, namely, luminous method in the arrangement of the topics, and elegant perspicuity of language in the discussion of them. When he delivered his opinion in any case of importance, he was so far from wishing or attempting to pass over the objections which had been suggested by those who argued on the opposite side, that he frequently repeated them in such a way as to give them greater force than had been claimed for them at the bar. The masterly manner in which he afterwards refuted them generally called forth the admiration, and extorted the assent, even of those who had originally propounded them."

Mr. Burke would be pleased, were he living, to find Lord Campbell—himself an ex-Lord Chancellor, and therefore qualified to give an opinion—taking the same view of Lord Hardwicke's judicial character, and even adopting the same turns of thought and of expression. Such a coincidence is the more remarkable and flattering, because it must be accidental, Lord Campbell being evidently ignorant of the existence of the biographies in the Law Magazine, since he does not refer to them even when he is relating anecdotes and uttering remarks which are to be found there, and nowhere else; "for Brutus is an honourable man*." The following extracts from the fifth volume of "The Lives of the Chancellors," when compared with the above quotation from Mr. Burke, will be found to possess a likeness almost amounting to identity.

"The wisdom of his decrees was the theme of universal eulogy. . . . He was anxious to bring every case within the scope of some general principle, which he enunciated and defined, guarding it with its proper conditions and exceptions. . . . He never resorted, however, to forced interpretations or fanciful analogies, and he was always anxious to support his opinion by legal precedents, in the selection and application of which he was particularly happy. Nor was he betrayed into the seductive and dangerous practice of laying down rules in loose and sweeping terms, which might carry their authority far beyond the point necessarily to be decided, and mischievously include cases which were not then in contemplation. He therefore expressed himself in the most guarded terms, and mentioned distinctly the qualifications with which he meant his opinion to be received. . . . Lord Hardwicke's judgments are deservedly praised for luminous method in the arrangement of the topics, and elegant perspicuity of language in the discussion of them. But I will venture to point out what I consider their peculiar excellence—the fair and manly manner in which the arguments are stated which are to be overruled. Lord Hardwicke always fully sees and appreciates the arguments against the side which he adopts; re-states them with additional force and clearness, and refutes them satisfactorily as almost to bring conviction to the mind of those who had invented them."

The book is full of such undesigned resemblances. We congratulate Lord Campbell on these fruits of "the aspiration after literary fame," which, he says, in his most busy days he was never able entirely to extinguish,—on his involvement in the honourable corps of the booksellers' hacks,—and on the success with which, following, we presume, his favourite maxim, quæ æstivæ, he has striven to appropriate to himself one, at least, of the three epithets bestowed by Pope & Bacon; and, no longer wondering that the promised volumes have already extended to four, we take leave of our biographical cliffionnier, recommending his walk to all who prefer the work of the scissors to that of the file, and the reek of the Cider Cellar to the smell of the lamp.

That our readers may not reproach us with leaving them in disreputable company, we take them back to the decent dulness of Mr. Harris, culling a few specimens, after the approved fashion of modern criticism:—

THE DUTY OF A BIOGRAPHER.

"To trace and illustrate the various connections and causes, whether on mind, on character, or on life; and on all occasions [ehou!] to introduce suitable reflections and deductions from the circumstances detailed." (Pref. xlii).

CONTRIBUTIONS TO HISTORY.

"A letter of congratulation was at this time written to Sir P. Yorke, by his relative, Mr. Meller, of Erith, on the occasion of the birth of the Solicitor-General's second son, who was named Charles." (Vol. 1, p. 117).

"The following notice from one of the public journals contains the announcement of the birth of a prince who in after times occupied the throne of these realms as King George the Third, and of whose career and character I shall have much to say." (Ib., p. 413).

"On Saturday, the 20th of October, Lord Hardwicke was present at a grand entertainment in the Guild-hall, together with the other lords justices, and several of the nobility and judges." (Vol. 2, p. 382, where may be read how his lordship of the city was sworn in, how the pole of his coach broke, &c.).

"The subjoined notice appears in one of the public journals of a disagreeable incident which occurred to Lord Hardwicke's second son, whose rural retreat at this time was at Acton:—

"Monday, 18th May, 1761.—The Hon. Charles Yorke, Esq., was robbed near Acton by a single highwayman." (Vol. 3, p. 341).

* Perhaps we are wrong: Mr. Burke, who remarks, to the credit of Lord Hardwicke, that only three of his decrees were appealed from, may be glanced at in the place where Lord Campbell says, that this fact is much harped on "by the common herd of Lord Hardwicke's petty biographers." In Tom Jones's time highwaymen were polite as well as bold, and while they robbed a lady of her jewels would compliment her on her beauty; but now, when an ex-keeper of the royal conscience takes to pilfering in bye-ways, he is careful that his demeanour and his deeds shall be in keeping. Villiter in modo, villiter in re. Thus, in the Life of Clarendon, poor Mr. Lister, after having been robbed of his last shilling anonymously, is at last named by the ex-fountain of equity for the purpose only of being sneered at.

THE PARIAHS OF ENGLAND.

"Owing to a barbarous conventional rule in this civilized age, they [literary men of real merit] are, in a great measure, excluded from society, or at any rate are allowed no recognised place or station in it, who are at once its highest benefactors and its greatest ornaments. By their limited means they are but too often precluded from participating in those pleasures they so contribute to enhance in others; and by the constant effort of mind and unremitting exertion which they undergo, they become debilitated and frail both in person and intellect." (Vol. 1, p. 389).

FIRST STEPS IN HISTORICAL LOGIC.

"Few events in the history of the annals of this country have been productive of consequences more extensively important than the deaths which have occurred of Princes of Wales. Had it not been for the loss of his elder brother, Prince Arthur, Henry the Eighth would not have been an English monarch, and it was only by the decease of Prince Henry that King Charles the First succeeded on the death of James to the sovereignty of these realms." (Vol. 2, p. 432).

A "SUITABLE REFLECTION."

"One act of George the Second's career—the greatest that man goes through—took place in this country, and with his funeral here, served to connect him more closely with it. Here at least he did advance a step beyond his royal father and sovereign predecessor, whose last breath was exhaled, and whose bones were laid, in a foreign land. But in neither of them, nor in one more than the other, was the sovereignty of whom I have been writing a willing agent." (Vol. 3, p. 223).

GEORGE IV. IN A THOROUGHLY NEW LIGHT.

"Of the chequered and somewhat clouded, though not inglorious career of this future sovereign, it becomes not here to say more than passingly to remark, that fair justice has never been done to a character adorned with many great and good and noble qualities, and exalted by the possession of mental powers and endowments, and a spirit of generosity and munificence, which were calculated to confer lustre on his reign. . . . Regarding him in a public capacity, apart from those voices by which the private characters of so many distinguished public and popular men too have been overclouded, it is impossible to deny that he possessed, in many and most important respects, the highest attributes of a great sovereign in all that concerns the leading interests of a great people. . . . The capital owes more of its magnificence and splendour and glory to him than to any single mind or man." (Vol. 3, p. 300).

With this eulogium on his fat friend, this solitary wreath on the grave of the modern Nero, (who was in other respects, however, more like Heliogabalus), we must conclude our selections from Mr. Harris's niaiseries, congratulating him on having produced a book from which even Lord Campbell would not wish to steal.

LONDON, APRIL 8, 1848.

THE liability of a hundred to make compensation for damage done by rioters becomes rather serious in times of popular excitement, when the organ of destructiveness is strongly developed in the individual and collective heads of the people.

This liability, however, has been placed within such narrow limits by legislative enactments, that numerous instances of injury by rioters may occur, in which the sufferer has no remedy beyond what may be afforded by proceeding against the offenders themselves. We perceive that a bill is about to be introduced into Parliament to extend this remnant of Saxon policy, and we propose, in the present article, briefly to consider the nature of the charge upon the hundred in this respect as it at present exists.

All prior statutes relating to the subject were repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, and the statute-law upon it is now contained and consolidated in 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31. By the 2nd section of the last-mentioned act, if any church or chapel, or house, stable, coachhouse, out-house, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, barn, or any building or erection used in carrying on trade or manufacture, or any machinery prepared for or employed in any manufacture, (extended by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 72, to threshing machines), or any steam engine, or other engine for sinking, draining, or working any mine, or any building used in conducting the business of any mine, or any bridge, waggon-way, or trunk for conveying minerals from any mine, shall be feloniously demolished, pulled down, or destroyed wholly or in part by any persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together, the inhabitants of the hundred, wapentake, ward, or other district in the nature of a hundred, in which any of the said offences shall be committed, shall be liable to yield full compensation to the persons damnified by the offence, not only for the damage done to any of the subjects before enumerated, but also for any damage which may at the same time be done by any such offenders to any fixture, furniture, or goods whatever in any such church, chapel, house, or other of the buildings or erections aforesaid. By the 12th section, where the damage is committed in any county of a city, or in any liberty, &c., which is not within any hundred, or does not contribute to the county-rate, such county, liberty, &c. shall be liable like the hundred.

The other sections of the act relate to the practical modes of proceeding for the enforcement of the remedy.

The injury to be within the act, therefore, must be committed by persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together, and must in itself amount to a felony. Indeed the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, was enacted so as to comprehend the offences mentioned in the 8th section of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, whereby it is enacted, "That if any persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace shall unlawfully and with force demolish, &c., or begin to demolish, &c., any church or chapel (and so on exactly as in the above sect. 2 of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31), every such offender shall be guilty of felony."

Therefore an inquiry into the liability of the hundred resolves itself into an inquiry whether an indictment framed upon 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8, could be sustained against the offenders.

The statute does not give any definition of riot, which remains as at common law, namely, a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to

of the people, whether the act intended be of itself lawful or unlawful. (Russell on Crimes by Greaves (3rd ed.), vol. 1, p. 266). But if any one of her Majesty's subjects be terrified, this is sufficient terror to substantiate that part of the charge of riot under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30. (Reg. v. Langford, 1 Car. & M. 602).

In an action on the Riot Act (1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5) against the hundred, it was held necessary to shew that the rioters were guilty of a felony within that statute. Therefore, where it appeared that a mob had broken the windows of the plaintiff's house, the stanchions of the windows, the uprights of the sashes, and all the window-shutters on the inside, because he had not illuminated in honour of Lord St. Vincent's victory over the Spanish fleet, it was held not to be a beginning to demolish the plaintiff's house within the 4th section of that act, so as to make the offenders guilty of felony, and, therefore, the hundred was not liable. (Reid v. Clarke, 7 T. R. 496).

It is not a "beginning to demolish" a house within the act, unless the jury be satisfied that the ultimate object of the rioters was to demolish the whole house, and that if they had carried their intention into full effect, they would, in point of fact, have demolished it. If they merely do an injury to the house, and then go away as having completed their purpose, it is not a beginning to demolish within the statute. (R. v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 237; R. v. Price, 5 C. & P. 510; R. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437; R. v. Adams, 1 C. & M. 299; R. v. Ashton, 1 Lewin, 296). Where a mob, after an obnoxious person had escaped, continued to attack a house, until the police interfered, it was left to the jury to say whether they had not the intention to demolish the house, as well as to injure the person; and the jury being of that opinion found the defendants guilty. (R. v. Batt, 6 C. & P. 329; and see R. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437).

This construction of the statute of course takes out of its operation the mere window breaking, which appears to be the most approved mode of demolition among both paupers and rioters.

It is a sufficient "demolishing" of a house, if it be so far destroyed as to be no longer a house; and the fact that the rioters left a chimney standing makes no difference. (Reg. v. Langford, 1 C. & M. 602).

In order to prove that there was a beginning to demolish the house, it must be shewn that some part of the freehold was destroyed; it is not, therefore, sufficient to prove that moveable shop shutters were destroyed. (Reg. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437*).

Although setting fire to a house is a substantive felony, yet, if fire is made the means of attempting to destroy a house, it is as much a beginning to demolish as if any other mode of destruction were resorted to. (Ib.) If persons riotously assemble and demolish a house, really believing that it is the property of one of them, and act bonâ fide in the assertion of a supposed right, this is not a felonious demolition within the act, even although there be a riot. (Reg. v. Langford, 1 C. & M. 602).

With regard to the principle adopted in assessing the amount of compensation, the case of The Duke of Newcastle v. The Hundred of Brighthelm (4 B. & A. 273) may be cited. That was an action to recover damages for the felonious demolition in part of Nottingham Castle by rioters; and it was decided, that, in assessing the compensation, the jury should consider what sum was necessary to repair the injury, and replace the building in the state it was in when the outrage was committed, and not whether the castle was an ancient possession of the family of the plaintiff or whether the plaintiff was likely to reside there, whether it was suitable for such residence. The Court in that case estimated the damages at 21,000*l.*, and the Court did not, under the circumstances, consider the excessive.

lawful and credible witnesses, upon trial, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due course of law, then every such person or persons so as aforesaid offending should be deemed, declared, and adjudged to be a traitor and traitors, and should suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit as in cases of high treason."

Under the above-mentioned statutes, and the exposition of them, referred to in Frost's case, it might be difficult to say what would be the act of those who should lead a great multitude up to the doors of the palace to demand the dismissal of particular ministers, or up to the doors of either House of Parliament to demand a change in the constitution or in any particular law. That such an act simpliciter would not be an overt act of treason may, we think, be assumed. For although the Queen or the Parliament might be intimidated by such a display of numbers, it does not follow that the mere assembling of could be fairly construed an overt act, expressing an intention to intimidate. Suppose, next, such multitude so led, and so acting, to be armed. Then we conceive, that, although the case would not satisfy all the three requisites laid down in Frost's case, and might not, therefore, come within the statute of Edward, it would be very difficult to say that the act of a large body, with arms in its hands, demanding something of the Queen or of Parliament, could have any other effect than intimidation, and it would be, we conceive, sound reasoning to say that such effect would be evidence of intent, and, therefore, that the act would be an overt act of treason within the 57 Geo. 3, c. 6*.

If, however, were added to the circumstances of the case, that the Queen's Government had lawfully prohibited and opposed the advance of the multitude to the Palace or to the Houses of Parliament, and such multitude were to persist, and in so doing to attack the Queen's army, there can be no manner of doubt that it would be treason; because then we should have all the requisites, viz. an insurrection accompanied by force, and for an object of a general nature.

As to what constitutes treason, under the head of moving or stirring any foreigner with force to invade the realm, there is not much difficulty. Of course, there cannot be any doubt, that, if any person were to solicit any foreigners to come into the realm for the purpose of attacking the Queen's Government with force, he would be guilty of treason within the very words of the statute. But if any person accepted the aid of foreigners being in the realm, and not expressly invited to come for that purpose, in any such transactions as those we have been discussing, such person would be neither more nor less guilty of treason, by reason of the introduction of foreigners into the transaction, than he would have been without. If the transaction were in itself lawful, the joining of foreigners in it could not make it criminal; and the question, treason or no treason, would depend on the act itself, not on the national or other qualifications of the persons acting. Besides, the statute expressly uses the word "invading," which can only apply to a coming into the realm, not to adopting any particular course of action after being in the realm.

The consideration of what constitutes such an expression of intention as amounts to an overt act by printing or writing, or what constitutes such an expression of intention by speaking, as amounts to treason, we shall reserve till the passing of the act now under the consideration of the Legislature, when, if circumstances continue to make the law of treason at all subject of immediate interest, we may return to the subject.

LONDON, APRIL 22, 1848.

IF the French law, on the subject of the naturalisation of aliens, be as the citizen Minister of Justice has represented it, in a correspondence alleged to have taken place between him and a distinguished English nobleman, it has the singular and perhaps not intended effect of excluding the subjects of some countries from the possibility of being naturalised in France. According to Monsieur Cremieux's exposition of the French law, a foreigner cannot be admitted to the rights of French citizenship, except on the terms of distinctly and entirely abandoning all his rights as the subject or member of the state to which he before belonged.

The principle of this seems to be adopted generally in the French law with regard to the rights of citizenship, for by the 17th article of the Code Civil, among the causes of losing the quality of a Frenchman, is included naturalisation in a foreign country. This is consistent with the doctrine broadly laid down by Monsieur Cremieux, that a man cannot be at once a citizen of France and a citizen of England, but must elect, if he will be a citizen of France, to be that and nothing else.

The consequence, however, of this doctrine is, that an English subject cannot in any manner become a citizen of France, if the rule of the French law is, as we presume it is, a rule of substance, and not of form; that is to say, if the requirement of the French law is not merely that a foreigner desiring to be naturalised shall declare that he renounces his rights of foreign citizenship, but that he shall have power de facto to do so. Now, if this be the French law, it is plain, not only that an English peer cannot, but that no English subject can bring himself within it; because no English subject can put off his allegiance, and throw off his country, so as completely either to deprive himself of his rights, or to free himself from his liabilities; he cannot, in fact, cease wholly to be a British subject, which it seems he must do in order to become a Frenchman, using the term in the sense of a citizen of France. Sir W. Blackstone, indeed, quoting Hale, (vol. 1, p. 369, 21st ed.), says, "It is a principle of universal law, that the natural-born subject of one prince cannot, by any act of his own, no, not by swearing allegiance to another, put off or discharge his natural allegiance to the former; for this natural allegiance was intrinsic and primitive, and antecedent to the other, and cannot be divested without the concurrent act of that prince to whom it was first due." But in this we apprehend the great commentator is going rather too far, and that the principle is one of positive and not of universal law. Vattel, treating of this subject, book 1, c. 19, lays it down as a general principle, that a man may, before he has by acting as a citizen tacitly adopted the particular society in which he is born, and may even afterwards, under particular circumstances, quit such society, exuere patriam. "Every man," he says, "is born free; and the son of a citizen, when come to years of discretion, may examine whether it be convenient for him to join the society for which he was destined by his birth. If he does not find it advantageous to remain in it, he is at liberty to quit it on making it a compensation for what it has done in its favour, and preserving, as far as his new engagements will allow him, the sentiments of love and gratitude he owes it. A man's obligations to his natural country may however change, lessen, or entirely vanish, according as he shall have quitted it lawfully and with good reason in order to choose another, or has been banished from it deservedly or unjustly in due form of law or by violence."

And again:—"There are cases in which a citizen has an absolute right to renounce his country; and abandon it entirely, a right founded on reason derived from the very nature of the social compact. 1. If the citizen cannot procure subsistence in his own country, it is undoubtedly lawful for him to seek it elsewhere; for political or civil society being entered into only with a view of facilitating to each of its members the means of supporting himself, and of living in happiness and safety, it would be absurd to pretend that a member whom it cannot furnish with such things as are most necessary has not a right to leave it. 2. If the body of the society, or he who represents it absolutely, fail to discharge their obligations towards a citizen, the latter may withdraw himself; for, if one of the contracting parties does not observe his engagements, the other is no longer bound to fulfil his, as the contract is reciprocal between the society and its members. It is on the same principle also, that the society may expel a member who violates its laws. 3. If the major part of the nation, or the sovereign who represents it, attempts to enact laws relative to matters in which the social compact cannot oblige every citizen to submission, those who are averse to these laws have a right to quit the society and go settle elsewhere. For instance, if the sovereign, or the greater part of the nation, will allow but one religion in the state, those who believe and profess another religion have a right to withdraw, and to take with them their families and effects; for they cannot be supposed to have subjected themselves to the authority of men in affairs of conscience; and if the society suffers, and is weakened by their departure, the blame must be imputed to the intolerant party, for it is they who fail in the observance of the social compact—it is they who violate it, and force the others to a separation. We have elsewhere touched upon some other instances of this third case, that of a popular state wishing to have a sovereign, and that of an independent nation taking the resolution to submit to a foreign power.”

It would appear from these observations, that the universal right is the right to throw off one's country; and that the incapacity to do so depends on the particular legislation of particular countries. That such incapacity is pronounced by the law of England as to every English subject can scarcely be doubted. If, however, there were any doubt about the case of an English commoner, there can be none in reference to that of an English peer, who is incapable of losing his nobility except by attainder, or by act of Parliament; and as he cannot lose his nobility, so neither can he lose the privileges incident to it, many of which are unquestionably of a character that would render it highly inexpedient for both countries, for the same person to be a peer of this realm and a citizen of another country. The result is, that as the French laws do not suffer French citizenship to co-exist with any foreign citizenship, and as English citizenship cannot be by any voluntary act of the party thrown off, an English subject cannot become a citizen of France.

A CASE of a rather singular description was very recently before the Master of the Rolls, (Clark v. Freeman, ante, p. 149), in which his Lordship refused an application for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using the plaintiff's name, principally on the ground that the particular use made of it, if an injury at all, was an injury in the nature of defamation; so that before equity would interfere, it must be established at law that there was defamation. The Court intimated, that, if a case of injury to the plaintiff means of gaining a livelihood were out, it might interfere, but added that it could not believe that a defamation of a professional person, so eminent as a plaintiff, could be injured in reputation, so as to injure his means of subsistence.

We are not aware of any case closely resembling this. In that numerous class of cases in which persons have been restrained from using the name, or style, or trade mark of others, such name, or style, or trade mark has been connected with the conducting by the plaintiff some business analogous to that attempted by the defendant, and the offence has been of a twofold kind; partaking of an appropriation of a designation to which the plaintiff had acquired a sort of customary right; partly of a fraudulent imitation of that which, whether the subject of property or not, had been the sign, at least, under which the plaintiff had obtained reputation, and by resorting to which the defendant had led the public to suppose they were dealing with their original tradesman, and so had committed a fraud on both the person and the public. The injury in this class of cases has always been assumed to be a fraud, and an injury to property, not in the sense of an invasion of a right of property, strictly so called; for except in Millington v. Fox, (3 My. & C. 388), there is, we believe, no case in which it has been supposed that, fraud apart, the law would protect trade marks as a subject of title;—but in this sense, that the fraud upon the plaintiff injured his profits in his trade. And some reference to this view seem to have been in the mind of the learned judge who decided Clark v. Freeman, when, on being asked with the authority of Byron v. Johnstone, (2 Me. & W. 101), his Lordship distinguished that case, on the ground that Lord Byron was in the habit of making books, but J. Clark did not make pills.

But although in most, if not in all, of the cases which have happened, that the plaintiff himself has been a manufacturer, it would not seem to follow, from the principles laid down in the cases, that that circumstance is essential to warrant the interference of equity. The doctrine, as it is laid down with great clearness and precision in Perry v. Truefit, (6 Beav. 681), is broadly, that a man is not allowed to use another's marks, letters, or other indicia, by which he may induce purchasers to believe that the goods which he is selling are the manufacture of another person. “It is his own,” says the Master of the Rolls, “it does not seem to me that a man can acquire a property in a name or mark; but whether he has or not, if another has not a right to use that name or mark for the purpose of deception, and in order to turn to himself that course of trade or that custom, which without that improper act, would have flowed to the person who first used, or was alone in the habit of using, the particular name or mark.” In the application of this principle, can it be material whether the person whose name is used, sells things of a similar character in his own name or not? If he carries on any occupation by which he lives, and goods are issued under the sanction of his name in such a manner as to lead to a supposition that he is directly or indirectly concerned in the issue of such goods, it is clear that a profit may be made by the party so using his name, by virtue of that user, and it may be shewn that such user injures the real owner of the name in his own business.

If it had been shewn, or if a strong case had been made, for believing, for instance, in the case of Clark v. Freeman, that by the use made by the defendant of Sir James Clark's name upon his box of pills, the public believed they were buying pills prepared by Sir James Clark, the first point of fraud would be made out.

Would not the next question be, whether by the fraudulent use of his name "that course of trade or custom which, but for the improper act, would have flowed to him," would not be diverted, and diverted for the benefit of the defendant? It is true that a physician does not usually (and in the particular case it was not alleged that the plaintiff did) sell pills as a dealer. But he may prescribe for his patients the use of particular pills, and receive a fee for so doing. If it were known, that an eminent physician did prepare and sanction the selling of any specific medicinal compound for the cure of particular forms of disease, can it be doubted, that many persons would be induced to purchase the medicine at a few shillings, in preference to paying a guinea to the physician for being advised to take the very same medicine? And if such might be the result in reference to the practice of a physician, by the public being led to believe that certain medicines publicly sold were prepared by him, and sold under his authority, and if a strong case upon evidence were made to shew that such was the result of a particular fraudulent use of a physician's name, would not the case, so far as it depends upon its being one of injury to property, be undistinguishable from Perry v. Truett, and that class of cases?

Is not the question, in fact, simply this, whether the fraudulent use of the plaintiff's name does divert from him, or may reasonably be expected to divert from him, a portion of the business by which he lives? And is not the question whether he himself carries on the same trade as the defendant, or carries on some business or profession less directly affected by the success of the defendant's fraud, material only in reference to the greater or less difficulty of making, on the evidence, a case of actual or highly probable injury to the plaintiff's property?

It may be true, that there is something in this view of the question not very reconcilable with the distinctions generally supposed to exist between professions of the higher grade and trades; and there is a sort of reluctance to presume, in respect of the members of so exalted a profession as that of a physician, that any such element as a calculation of cost can be imported into the inducements that lead the public to consult them. Nevertheless, it is unquestionable that such sordid calculations do mingle with the motives of those who produce the incomes of physicians, and, therefore, if there be nothing wrong morally or professionally in a physician's endeavouring to protect himself against a fraud by which he is injured in his professional income, we apprehend that those distinctions between professions and trades, which attribute to the former a splendid insensibility to gain, are distinctions which, if they in truth exist at all, will not be noticed in a court of either law or equity; except in the way in which they seem to have affected the mind of the Master of the Rolls, that is, as determining the degree of credit that the Court will give to suggestions and presumptive proof of injury to property.

Cases cited in the best Modern Treatises not elsewhere reported. The Third Edition. By R. TABBART HARRISON, Esq., of the Middle Temple.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. In strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

LAW BOOKS recently published by S. SWEET, 1, Chancery-lane; and R. STEVENS & G. S. NORTON, Bell-yard, Lincoln's Inn, and 194, Fleet-street.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25s. boards.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with the subject. Also, copious Analyses of the Cases and Pleadings. By BERTS PHILIP TREWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading,) and changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes of valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter part is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of every practitioner. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; it includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Law Oct. 29th, 1845.

PRINCIPLES OF the LAW of REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work with which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupilage."—Warren's Law Society, pp. 360, 366.

"The want which the Student himself, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Deceased, published in 1857) has endeavored to supply by his present Work, and we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

LAW.—WANTED, by a Gentleman who has been admitted, and who is well acquainted with the London Practice, a SITUATION to manage the Conveyancing or Common Law, or both, under the direction of the Principal. Salary not so much an object as permanent employment. Apply, by letter, pre-paid, to Mr. Laidman, 119, Chancery-lane.

FOUR SISTERS, whose Father (a highly respectable Solicitor) and Mother are dead, and who have been dependent upon the precarious profits of lodging and house-letting at a fashionable watering place, are now threatened with ruin and entire destitution, owing to the recent commercial distress of this country, and their consequent inability to let their houses and apartments. One of the sisters is in a Lunatic Asylum, and two others, though at present well, have been similarly afflicted, and the little property to which they became entitled on their father's death has been swallowed up by the heavy expense of these illnesses, and in fitting up and furnishing three houses, to be sub-let to lodgers and visitors during the season of resort to the town alluded to.

Two gentlemen, to whom these ladies have been known for many years, have undertaken the effort to raise the sum of 350*l*. to liquidate their debts and to procure them the means of self-support by a less precarious mode; and contributions in aid of this object are earnestly solicited. Reference may be made to the Rev. C. E. KERHAWAY, Vicar of Campden, Gloucestershire, and R. Faw, Esq., 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, in corroboration and explanation of the foregoing, to either of whom Subscriptions may be forwarded.

On the 1st of May will be published, price 1*s*., No. 1 of A NEW LEGAL MONTHLY PERIODICAL, called THE LAWYER, or MONTHLY JURISPRUDENTIAL RECORD. This Work will be published for the Proprietors of "The Lawyer's Companion," and a few words will explain its objects and character. It will contain:—1. Politics, so far as they affect Professional Subjects.—2. Disquisitions on Controverted Points in Law and Equity.—3. Reviews of New Books, Legal and Miscellaneous.—4. Grievances of the Profession.—5. Practical Points of General Interest.—6. Legal Biography, and Sketches of Character, both of the living and the dead.—7. Original Reports of such Cases as either establish new Points, or impugn settled Principles.—8. Correspondence, containing Queries on moot Points, and Answers.—9. Records of all that is worth recording in reference to the Profession, such as Reports of Commissioners, Parliamentary Returns, &c.—10. New Acts of Parliament, New Orders and Rules of Court, Professional Lists, &c.

From the foregoing it will be perceived, that the Work is intended to belong to the Profession as a Class; and in announcing it, the Proprietors are anxious to avoid misconception as to its true object and character, which will be to make it in every respect a complete and essential Periodical for the Legal Practitioner, and an efficient organ for the conservation of the rights and privileges of the Profession.

LONDON, APRIL 29, 1848.

A QUESTION of great importance to merchants was investigated in a recent case, (Dunlop v. Higgins, Dom. Proc. 12 Jur. 295), and received a final decision. The question referred to was, whether if an offer be made by one merchant to another, where the custom of trade is, that the party offering is bound if the other accept the offer by return of post, and the party accepting answers in due course, but, by casualty in the Post-office service, the letter does not arrive when in due course it ought, the party making the offer is bound by such acceptance. It was decided in Dunlop v. Higgins that he is. The judgment is expressed in terms from which it is to be collected, that the acceptance of itself binds the party offering; and that the principle is, that if the party accepting does all in his power to notify his acceptance, the other party is bound. Some of the cases previously decided have not gone quite so far as this; and it must be presumed, that in laying down this principle, the House of Lords intended it to be taken with the qualification contained in the judgment of Lord Eldon in Kennedy v. Lee, (3 Mer. 441), to which we will presently advert. The case of Adams v. Lindsell, (1 B. & Ald. 681), which appears to have been relied upon in Dunlop v. Higgins in support of the argument that the assent ought to be actually communicated to the party making the offer, in order to bind him, clearly decided no such thing. Whether it decided anything may be questioned. In that case the defendants had made an offer to sell, receiving plaintiffs' answer in course of post. The defendants misdirected the letter, by reason of which the plaintiffs did not receive it till after they should have received it in the due course of delivery; but they wrote accepting the offer on the evening of the day on which they had received it; and that letter was received by the defendants in due course, but after they would have received it if the defendants' letter had been originally correctly addressed and delivered in due course. In the interval the defendants sold the wool to another person; and it was held, that there was a valid contract from the time of the acceptance by the plaintiffs. In this case it will be observed, that the cause of the delay in the receipt of the acceptance arose from the default of the defendants themselves, and not from any casualty over which they had no control; and on this point the decision was, that it must be taken as against them, that the plaintiffs' answer was received in course of post. The case, therefore, in effect, does not decide the point; because, assuming, as the judgment does, that the offer was not only accepted, but the acceptance notified by return of post, there could be no dispute. The act of the plaintiffs was within the express terms of the offer. The language of Lord Eldon in the other case cited in support of the necessity of notification, in due course of post, to complete the contract, (Kennedy v. Lee, 3 Mer. 441), is to the following effect:—"I have always understood (said his Lordship) the law of the Court to be, that, if a person communicates his acceptance of an offer within a reasonable time after the offer being made, and if within a reasonable time of the acceptance being communicated no variation has been made by either party, in the terms of the offer so made and accepted, the acceptance must be taken as simultaneous with the offer, and both together as constituting such an agreement as the Court will execute." The principle of this decision seems to be, not that the contract is completed from the moment that the offer is accepted, without more, and that the notification of the acceptance at any time will bind the party offering; but that, if there is acceptance and notification thereof within a reasonable time, then the contract is complete, as if the offer had been made and accepted at one and the same time. The case of Stocken v. Collins (7 Mee. & W. 515) puts the principle of the law, in the case of refusal of acceptance on payment of bills of exchange, on the fact of acceptance, irrespective of the actual fact of notification. "If," says Parke, B., "a party puts a notice of dishonour into the post, so that, in the due course of delivery, it would arrive in time, he has done all that can be required of him, and it is no fault of his that delay occurs in the delivery." And Alderson, B., says, "The real question is, whether the party has been guilty of laches."

In none of these cases, however, had any excessive or even material delay occurred; and it is fair to suppose that in none of them did the learned judges who decided them, mean to say that the person making the offer would be bound by the fact of the other party accepting, although the notification of acceptance should never arrive at all, or only arrive after some excessive and unreasonable delay. It is obvious that circumstances might happen which would have the effect of creating so much delay and suspense as would operate by way of great hardship on the party making the offer, and we apprehend the Courts will not push the doctrine of Stocken v. Collins and Dunlop v. Higgins at all further than those cases have carried it, because it is obvious that though it may be a hardship on the party to whom an offer is made, and who accepts it, that the contract thus formed should be broken by casualties over which he has no control, it is an equal hardship on the party making an offer, that he should be kept in suspense by casualties over which he has no control, not knowing whether he has a contract with the person to whom he has made an offer, and who is not bound to accept or refuse, and yet unable to enter into a contract with any other person for at least such a period as may be deemed reasonable.

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

- First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
- Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

- Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.
- Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium than the great majority of other Life Offices.

AN ELEMENTARY VIEW of the COMMON LAW, Uses, Devices, and Trusts, with Reference to the Creation and Conveyance of Estates. By WILLIAM HAYES, Esq., Barrister at Law. In 8vo., price 5s. boards.

FOUR SISTERS, whose Father (a highly respectable Solicitor) and Mother are dead, and who have been dependant upon the precarious profits of lodging and house-letting at a fashionable watering place, are now threatened with ruin and entire destitution, owing to the recent commercial distress of this country, and their consequent inability to let their houses and apartments. One of the sisters is in a Lunatic Asylum, and two others, though at present well, have been similarly afflicted, and the little property to which they became entitled on their father's death has been swallowed up by the heavy expense of these illnesses, and in fitting up and furnishing three houses, to be sub-let to lodgers and visitors during the season of resort to the town alluded to.

Two gentlemen, to whom these ladies have been known for many years, have undertaken the effort to raise the sum of 350*l*. to liquidate their debts and to procure them the means of self-support by a less precarious mode; and contributions in aid of this object are earnestly solicited. Reference may be made to the Rev. C. E. KENNEDY, Vicar of Campden, Gloucestershire, and R. Faw, Esq., 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, in corroboration and explanation of the foregoing, to either of whom Subscriptions may be forwarded.

LONDON, MAY 6, 1848.

DURING the past week two judgments of considerable importance, as affecting the operation of the New Small Debts Act, (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), have been delivered in the Exchequer and Queen's Bench. The one (Grimbley v. Aykroyd, reported in the present number) related to the splitting of a claim into several demands, so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the county court. By the 63rd section of the above act, "It shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said courts, but any plaintiff having cause of action for more than 20*l.*, for which a plaint might be entered under this act if not for more than 20*l.*, may abandon the excess, and thereupon the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover to an amount not exceeding 20*l.*; and the judgment of the Court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly."

Several decisions, some of them conflicting, have taken place in the county courts, as to the true construction to be put upon this section, and observations will be found upon it in 11 Jur. 221, 229.

The question has turned upon the meaning of the words "cause of action," which it is evident may be in respect of one contract or of several contracts. In the first case no question would arise, as the demand would be clearly indivisible.

A cause of action on several contracts may be in respect of several distinct things, e. g. rent and goods sold and delivered, which nevertheless may be claimed under one indebitatus count and so form one cause of action, or it may be in respect of several items in one running account, as in a tradesman's bill. In the former case, it appears, that several plaints may be levied on account of each distinct and separate contract, that is, one for the rent and one for the goods sold and delivered. This was the opinion of Coleridge, J., in regard to a similar section in Neale v. Ellis, (1 Dowl. & L. 163). There the plaintiff had demands for the price of a horse, for goods sold, and for rent, and having recovered for the horse in the county court, he was held entitled to sue for the remainder in the superior court; and per Coleridge, J., "There were originally three distinct and entire causes of action: namely, one for a horse; a second, for rent, which is as distinct from the first as can be, and a third, for goods sold and delivered. These are all distinct, and the plaintiff has recovered only in respect of one of them. I entertain a strong opinion that the case does not fall within the act." This case appears to have been recognised by the Court in Grimbley v. Aykroyd.

But there is a distinction between such a case and where there is a bill running from day to day. In the latter instance it is true that each item of goods supplied, or work done, constitutes a separate contract, so that the creditor may sue thereon, yet if he does not so sue, the understanding is that the several items should be united and form one entire demand; one item is connected with another; the dealings are not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous. To such a case the Court were of opinion that the term "cause of action" in the above act applied. They, therefore, made a rule absolute for a prohibition to a judge of a county court under the following circumstances:—The defendant was a railway contractor, and he told the plaintiff, a grocer, to supply his labourers with provisions according to written orders. Upwards of 3000 of these orders had been issued and complied with, and 30*l.* 19*s.* remaining due as a balance, the plaintiff commenced 228 plaints in the county court against the defendant, each plaint being for the amount (varying from 20s. to 5l.) of the goods supplied to each of the workman.

The other case (Lewis v. Hance) turned on the exemption of an attorney plaintiff from the jurisdiction of the county courts, and his privilege of suing in the superior courts, notwithstanding the act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

In a former article (11 Jur. 413) we brought forward certain arguments to shew, that, in our opinion, attorneys were subject to the provisions of this act; but this decision exempts them as plaintiffs.

The 67th section declares, that "no privilege, except as hereinafter excepted, shall be allowed to any person to exempt him from the jurisdiction of any court holden under this act." The privileges afterwards excepted relate only to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the Court of the Lord Warden of the Stanaries in Cornwall.

The Court, in Lewis v. Hance, held, that, as it had been decided that the privilege of attorney plaintiffs had not been taken away by the Uniformity of Process Act or by Courts of Requests Acts, (see Gardner v. Jessop, 2 Wils. 42; Wiltshire v. Lloyd, 1 Doug. 381; Board v. Parker, 7 East, 46; Wright v. Skinner, 1 Mee. & W. 44), between which and the late act they did not recognise in this respect any substantial distinction, therefore they ought not to hold such privilege excluded by the words used in the present act. But they seemed to be of opinion that if a party were brought within the jurisdiction of the county court by being sued therein, then the section would apply, and the privilege of an attorney (defendant) be taken away.

LONDON, MAY 13, 1848.

COUNTY-court law bids fair to supersede railway-law in the demands which it is making on the time and attention of the judges at Westminster. The writ of prohibition has become popular; and although the applications to the superior courts would doubtless be much more frequent were some kind of appeal permitted from these inferior tribunals, yet, under the present system, we may expect shortly to see the duties and powers of the judges who preside over them duly defined and limited.

In our last number we offered some remarks upon the cases of Grimbley v. Aykroyd and Lewis v. Hance, relating to the splitting of demands in the county courts, and to the exemption of attorney plaintiffs from their jurisdiction. The effect of the former decision is to promise the retention of a superior judicature, and the profession of the Bar in this country,—two actual or supposed benefits, the prolonged existence of which would have been very doubtful had the decision permitted debts of any amount to be recovered in courts established for the 'recovery of small debts.' The effect of Lewis v. Hance, we presume, will be that attorneys will suddenly become the holders of a considerable number of bills of exchange and promissory notes. The dissatisfaction which undoubtedly prevails with regard to the present system of administering law in the small-debts court will find vent in the indorsement of negotiable instruments for amounts under 20*l.* to the privileged class of attorneys, so long as the Legislature may be pleased to leave them alone.

We perceive, that, on Wednesday last, a rule was made absolute by the Court of Queen's Bench in Reg. v. Parkam, calling upon the defendant to shew by what authority he exercises the office of judge in and for several districts, whereas it is contended, that, by the Small Debts Act, a separate judge must be appointed for each district. We considered this important question in a former article, (11 Jur. 309), and we shall reserve any further remarks upon it until judgment shall have been given on the quo warranto.

The case, In re Dunford, in our last Number, (12 Jur. 361), is deserving of consideration. It came before the Court of Exchequer on a motion for a prohibition against proceeding in a cause in the county court on a judgment of the Queen's Bench for 17*l.*

There were three objections: first, that an action would not lie in the county court on a judgment of one of the superior courts at Westminster. In Rance v. James, (12 Jur. 62), the Court had granted a rule for a prohibition on such a ground, and it was afterwards made absolute, because no one had appeared to shew cause.

On the present occasion the Court granted a rule nisi on this point, though Parke, B., said, "You probably will not be able to maintain it." The second objection was, that the judge allowed the judgment of the Queen's Bench to be proved by an examined copy of the judgment roll; but the Court decided that it was no ground for a prohibition, even if the judge had clearly received improper evidence, as it was a matter left to his discretion; though it would have been different had the statute said that the judge should not receive an examined copy of a record as evidence of the record.

In Rance v. James, it was suggested as an argument against an action lying in the county court on a judgment of the superior court, that the county court had no means of getting the judgment-roll, and Parke, B., said, "That is the strongest point." In an action here on a judgment in one of the superior courts, we obtain it by mittimus; but in

be very inconvenient, if the records of the superior courts were to be continually sent to the county courts, scattered all over the kingdom."

However, under the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, by which debts not exceeding 20*l.*, by force of any judgment, &c., could be recovered by summons in the Court of Bankruptcy or an inferior court of record, it was the practice to produce an office or examined copy of the judgment-roll as evidence thereof, and such has been the practice under the act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. And upon issue joined on nul tiel record in a superior court, where the record is in another superior court, the inconvenience of removing the originals has been avoided by obtaining the tenor (that is, a literal transcript) of the record, through the means of a certiorari and mittimus out of Chancery*.

The third objection was, that the examined copy of the judgment-roll, when produced, shewed a debt of 40*l.* claimed from the defendant, with final judgment for 17*l.*, and no remittitur for the difference; but to this it was answered by Parke, B., "A judgment, however erroneous, is binding until it is reversed; consequently, if there were any error in this judgment, you should have brought your writ of error upon it, and cannot avail yourself of that error as a defence to an action on the judgment."

A point of some importance upon the practice in injunction cases was recently decided by the Master of the Rolls, in a case not yet reported. (Lord Wellesley v. Lord Mornington, 4th May, 1848). An injunction had been granted to restrain the defendant from cutting timber and committing other acts of waste; but the injunction instead of being worded in the usual way, restraining the defendant, his servants and agents, was directed against the defendant alone.

Battley, who it was stated was the steward of the defendant, and had notice of the injunction, cut timber and committed other acts of waste, notwithstanding the injunction, and a motion was made to commit him for breach of the injunction. An objection was taken by Battley, that, not being included in the injunction, the motion could not be sustained against him; and Lord Langdale allowed the objection, observing, that the object of the motion was to punish Battley for doing what he knew the defendant was enjoined from doing.

There are, we believe, no earlier cases directly deciding this point†, but there are some which affect its principle. The nearest is Montague v. Hill, (4 Russ. 128). In that case an injunction was granted in a suit to which Hill and Smith, Hill's assignee, were both parties, against Hill, his counsellors and agents, not naming Smith as defendant, and not in terms naming the assignee. It was doubted by Lord Lyndhurst, C., whether the injunction bound Smith.

In an old case (Boote v. Hanley, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr.

528) it is said, "If a person is not plaintiff to a suit, nor acquired any right pendente lite from any one as party, but is only exercising an antecedent right, inasmuch as he is not party, this is no breach of an injunction." From this loose statement it is not very easy to say what was the precise point of the case; but the statement is, at any rate, consistent with the notion, that, as against a person not included in an injunction, the Court will not proceed by way of contempt for an act forbidden by the injunction. The Court has, however, held it clear contempt for a person, a stranger to the cause, to impede the officers of the Court in the execution of its orders. This was decided in Ex parte Clarke, (1 Russ. & My. 563), where the defendant, H. Clarke, being in contempt, the commissioners under a commission of rebellion, sought for him in the house of C. Clarke, his brother. C. Clarke at first refused to admit them, but on the commission being produced allowed them to search the house. They did not find the defendant, H. Clarke, and on quitting the house were given by C. Clarke in charge to the watch. For this C. Clarke was committed for contempt. "The ground," said Lord Brougham, C., on a motion to discharge the order for committal, "is, that after the commission was exhibited to Mr. Clarke, he assisted in taking to the watchhouse individuals armed with the authority of the Court. I think that, for that violence, the Vice-Chancellor was justified in ordering him to stand committed, and that it makes no difference that the person guilty of the violence was not a party to the suit."

No doubt there is a considerable practical distinction between impeding the officers of the Court in the execution of their duty, and doing an act which another person is forbidden to do by the order of the Court. In the first case it is clear that the Court intended its officers to do the duty entrusted to them. To obstruct them, therefore, must be to defeat the intention of the Court. But an order that A. shall not cut timber, may not be intended to protect the timber at all events, but only to protect it as against A. But unless I shew an independent right to do the act which A. is forbidden to do, or if it appears that I can have no right to do it except as representing A., it is difficult to distinguish in principle my act when I do that which the Court has forbidden to be done by A. from the act of a person who prevents that being done which the Court had ordered to be done: in either case the jurisdiction of the Court is wilfully defied, and its intention wilfully frustrated. We believe the case of Ex parte Clarke was not mentioned to the Court in Lord Wellesley v. Lord Mornington; and we are not able to state whether it appeared upon the affidavits in that case that Battley could not have had any independent right to do the acts that Lord Mornington was enjoined from doing, as the motion went off upon the preliminary objection, and the merits were not gone into. A case of Leves v. Morgan (not referred to in Lord Wellesley v. Lord Mornington) is reported in 5 Price, 518, from the marginal note to which one would infer, that the injunction for breach of which a motion to commit was made and granted, was not directed in terms against the person committed. The marginal note is as follows:—"Where a receiver of rents and profits is enjoined from further receiving &c., the Court will extend the injunction to his agent, (an attorney in this case), and commit him also for a breach of the order, although he, living at a distance in the country, have not been regularly served with the injunction, if sufficient circumstances can be shewn to afford fair and satisfactory evidence that such agent knew of the order." If the injunction had been granted against the defendant and his agent, the expression, "the Court will extend the injunction to his agent," would have been very inappropriate. The report itself, however, does not shew clearly whether the injunction was granted against the agent or not. It refers to the report of the original motion for an injunction in a preceding part of the same volume, (p. 150), where the statement is merely, "it was moved, that the defendants, Morgan, James, and John Morgan, might be restrained," &c. The person alleged to have been guilty of a breach was another defendant, Lewis, the defendant Morgan's attorney, who, after the injunction had issued, received monies from the tenants, (Morgan being restrained as receiver from receiving &c.) In the arguments against the motion to commit, it was urged, first, that Lewis was merely an agent, an argument which would have been certainly very useless, if the agents of Morgan had been named in the injunction; and secondly, that he had not sufficient notice. The judgments seem to have gone entirely on the question of notice, and to have taken it for granted, that, as agent, Lewis was subject to the injunction, if he had notice, which, it is presumed, the learned judges would not have taken so completely for granted, if agents had not been in terms included in the injunction. The case of Lewis v. Morgan cannot, on the whole, as reported, be said to throw much light on the point determined in Lord Wellesley v. Lord Mornington.

* And such held to be the proper course in an inferior court in Pitt v. Knight, (1 Saund. 86).

† We may except, perhaps, a very old case of Segewick v. Redman, (Cary, 44), in which it was decided that where an injunction had been granted against defendant's attorney proceeding at law, it was a breach for the defendant to proceed. But the great antiquity of this case, and the meagreness of the reports in Cary, render it, perhaps, not of much authority.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—Richard Packer, of Axbridge, Somersetshire; Charles William Lawrence, of Cirencester, Gloucestershire; John Howard, of Portsmouth.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, at Westminster, has appointed Richard Holmes, of Arundel, in the county of Sussex, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Sussex.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Sir Ralph Howard, Bart., for the county of Wicklow, in the room of Lieut.-Col. William Acton, who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where an attorney is steward of a manor, the Court will entertain a summary jurisdiction over him to compel him to deliver up the court rolls, &c., because a mandamus would lie; but if deeds, &c. come to his hands in any other manner, or on any other account, the party must resort to his action. Accordingly, in a late case, the Court refused to proceed summarily against a steward who was an attorney, to compel him to account before the Master for receipts and payments in respect of a mortgaged estate, to pay the balance to his employer, and deliver up on oath all deeds, writings, &c. relative to the estate: this being the proper subject of a bill in equity, and not a case for a mandamus to compel a steward of a manor to deliver up court rolls, &c. (Cocks v. Harman, 6 East, 404; and see Hughes v. Mayre, 3 T. R. 275; Strong v. Howe, 1 Stra. 621; Marshall's case, 2 Black. Rep. 912; Ex parte Grubb, 5 Taunt. 206; Ex parte Corpus Christi College, 6 Taunt. 105).

Where the bailiff of the honour of Pontefract refused to deliver up the corpse of a person who had been committed to his custody under a ca. sa., and which he detained on the ground of certain fees due to him, the Court granted a peremptory mandamus in the first instance to compel him. (In re Jewinson, 5 Jur. 969; In re Wakefield Bailiffs, 1 G. & D. 568).

Where a fraudulent entry of the birth of a child was made with the registrar of births, under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, the Court, on application for a mandamus to compel the superintendent registrar of births, &c. to erase the entry, refused the writ, saying, that, however they might be disposed to interpose to prevent what appeared to be an attempt to commit a gross fraud, still, on consideration of the provisions of the statute, they did not think they had power to interfere in the way proposed. (Ex parte Stanford, 1 G. & D. 428; S. C., 9 Dowl. 927; 5 Jur. 988).

But where an infant under two months old was deserted at the door of the Foundling Hospital, the Court issued a mandamus in the first instance to the directors of the poor of the parish constituted by a local act, commanding them to receive the child, although the application was made at the instance of a stranger, who took the child from humane motives. (Ex parte The Foundling Hospital, 5 Dow. 722).

The Court will not grant a mandamus to trustees to repair a road. On application for a mandamus, the Court said, that, if they entertained the motion, they might have to try questions of guilty or not guilty on the state of the roads, and all questions affecting the liability. (Reg. v. The Oxford and Witney Roads, 12 Adol. & Ell. 427; but see Rex v. The Commissioners of Llandilo Roads, 2 T. R. 232; Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Barnard Castle, T. T. 1840). It seems, the proper mode would be for the parish to submit to an indictment, and then call upon the trustees for contribution to the fine. (1b).

Having now endeavoured to set forth the various cases in which the Court have in their discretion granted or refused the writ of mandamus, we will proceed to offer a few remarks on the course to be adopted by persons previous to their application to the Court, a careful attention to which may frequently save considerable litigation and expense. The preliminary conduct of the party applying is particularly important, because, if the Court find that he has acted courteously and properly, he will thereby frequently avoid the payment of costs, though he fail in other respects. (1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 6; 2 Mad. Ch. Prac. 546; Weymouth v. Boyer, 1 Ves. jun. 416; 1 Mad. Ch. Prac. 216; Colliver v. Dudley, (1 T. & R. 421, as to small circumstances frequently influencing a court in their giving or refusing costs). In the first place, the party claiming admission to an office or other right, and intending afterwards to endeavour to enforce his claim by motion for a mandamus, should frame a written and explicit notice of his claim succinctly, stating the grounds and reasons, and which may be somewhat in the form of a notice of appeal against a poor-rate, (see Forms, Burn's Justice, tit. "Poor," under tit. "Precedents"). He should then in the same notice, in a courteous manner, request admission to the office or performance of the other act within a reasonable time, naming a proper day and place; and that, if inconvenient to the party required, then that he appoint another time and place. In the same notice it may be intimated, that in case of refusal to comply with the request the party will be under the necessity to apply to the Court as the only means of obtaining the right. At the same time, if a clear and positive opinion of counsel has been obtained in favour of the claimant, it will be a proper and candid measure to accompany the notice with a copy of such case and opinion, and request the party himself to take advice. If after such a precautionary measure the party should persist in his refusal, and the Court should afterwards think that he did so improperly under the above discretionary power, they would probably make him pay, or not allow him costs, according to the circumstances of the case. The stat. 12 Geo. 3, c. 21, for giving relief in proceedings upon writs of mandamus for the admission of freemen into corporations, after reciting, that although a writ of mandamus to admit to the franchise at their instance be obeyed, the party applying for the same is, nevertheless, put to great trouble, delay, and expense, and that by the existing law he cannot recover his costs where the writ has been obeyed, enacts, "That where any such party entitled to be admitted shall apply to the mayor or other person, officer or officers who hath authority to admit to be admitted a citizen, Burgess, or freeman, and shall give notice specifying the nature of his claim to such mayor, &c., that if he shall not admit such person a citizen, Burgess, or freeman, within one month from the time of such notice, the Court of King's Bench will be applied to; and if such mayor, &c. shall refuse or neglect to admit such person, and a writ of mandamus shall afterwards issue, then the party applying for the same (unless the Court shall see just cause to the contrary) shall obtain and receive from such mayor, &c., all the costs," &c. In cases not within this act, it would be prudent to observe the same provision in any notice which it is always expedient to serve. At the appointed time there should be a second application in person to the proper officer, requesting admission, &c., and this should be in the presence of one or more proper persons, to join in an affidavit. And, at all events, in case a personal interview or peremptory refusal to admit has not been obtained, it may be expedient to serve another notice referring to the former, and the refusal or silence, and again requiring admission, and pointing out the loss or inconvenience that will result from continued refusal, and the necessity that will ensue for the expense of proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, and the power of that Court over the costs.

Care must be taken before making the application for the writ of mandamus, that the party applying has a specific legal right, and no other specific, or, at least, so beneficial, a remedy. This forms the basis on which the Court is induced to interfere by their prerogative writ; for, in general, as we have before seen, unless there be a specific legal right, and the absence of a specific legal remedy, the Court will in no case entertain the application, (Rex v. Canterbury, 8 East, 219), for it is a jurisdiction to be exercised with great caution,—an undue attention to which may involve the applicant in considerable expense, without any beneficial results; as, in the event of a rule nisi being granted, and subsequently discharged, the Court, having a discretionary power with regard to awarding the costs, will assuredly, if the application be improperly made, visit them upon the party applying. It must also be borne in mind that parties seeking to enforce their rights by mandamus must apply within a reasonable time; for it is a rule that the Court will not interfere by mandamus after considerable delay, and where the party applying for it has slept on his right, and allowed, perhaps, other rights to grow up; or a disposal of the fund out of which the claim ought originally to have been perfected. (Rex v. The Stanforth Canal Co., 1 M. & S. 32; Rex v. Cockermouth, 1 B. & Adol. 378, 380). Therefore, the Court refused a mandamus to justices to make a rate under the Highway Act (13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 47) to reimburse two inhabitants of a parish on whom a fine for the non-repair of a highway had been levied, after a lapse of eight years, though applications had been made from time to time to the magistrates below in the interval, who had declined to make a rate, on the ground that the parish at large had been improperly indicted and convicted. (Rex v. The Justices of Lancashire, 12 East, 366; see also Ex parte Sturt, 9 Law Journ. 124; Rex v. The Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company, 11 Adol. & Ell. 316; Reg. v. The Justices of Cheshire, 4 Dowl. & L. 94; R. v. The Mayor of Evesham, 9 Adol. & Ell. 670; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 G. & D. 706). Lord Denman, C. J., there said, "Although there is no absolute rule of practice upon the subject, yet it should be clearly understood that an application of this nature should be made with reasonable promptitude." And in an information under the 24 Geo. 3, c. 25, the Court have decided that the defendant must make his application for a mandamus for the examination of witnesses within the first four days after plea pleaded. (Rex v. Holland, 4 T. R. 662). Another rule is, that a mandamus to proceed to an election upon judgment of ouster cannot be moved for till judgment be actually signed. (Rex v. The Corporation of West Loe, 3 Burr. 1836). And a peremptory mandamus will not be awarded until the proceedings on the first mandamus be complete; as in the case of a mandamus having issued requiring payment of two sums of money where the prosecutor traversed the return, and the issues were found for him as to one sum, and substantially in his favour as to the other; but a rule nisi had been obtained to enter a verdict for the defendant. As to this the Court would not award a peremptory mandamus to enforce payment of the first sum pending the rule as to the second. (Reg. v. Baldwin, 8 Adol. & Ell. 947).

In the event of the parties refusing to comply with the request of the applicant as pointed out, then an affidavit or affidavits should be prepared, setting out fully and explicitly the nature of the office, and shewing its duties and other facts essential to establish that it is of a public nature. (Anon., 2 Chit. Rep. 254). An affidavit to support a mandamus to a clergyman to replace a parish clerk, at least had better shew that it is an office for life. And to justices to appoint overseers, it must be shewn that the district is, or at least that it is reputed to be, a village or parish. (Rex v. Bedfordshire, Cald. 167; Anon., Loft, 618; Rex v. Bridgewater, Cowp. 139). As to a hamlet, see Rex v. Wiltshire, (1 Wils. 138). The affidavits should also anticipate and answer every possible objection or argument in fact which it may be expected will be urged against the claim. A copy of the notice or notices previously served on the mayor, &c., should be annexed and verified, and the service of each, and non-compliance with the notice, also sworn to; and when any strong resistance is expected, any disputable or material facts should be corroborated by one or more respectable and experienced individuals.

Although it is a general rule, that, if there be a cause in court, all affidavits made use of in the progress of it must be intitled correctly in the court; (Chit. Arch. 1208); yet, in an application for a mandamus, it is sufficient if the affidavits contain the title of the court, or it appear that they were sworn in the court, care must be taken that they are so intitled; for an omission in this respect will be fatal. (Re v. Hare, 13 East, 189). It should seem also, that, in shewing cause against the rule for a mandamus, more particularity is required, and that it would be more correct to intitle them, because, until the rule is granted, there is no cause in court, and that would be a sufficient reason for the omission; but immediately a rule is granted, it may then be said there is a cause pending in court, and, therefore, they ought to be intitled. In shewing cause against a criminal information, which is a proceeding somewhat analogous, it seems that it is optional to intitle them or not. (Re v. Harrison, 6 T. R. 60; Re v. Robinson, Id. 642; Chit. Arch., 7th ed., 1210).

The contents of the affidavits must necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case; but in all cases the party applying must shew, upon the face of them, sufficient facts from which the Court may be enabled to judge whether on the statement disclosed the party applying has a right to the remedy sought. Therefore, in every application for a mandamus to admit or restore to an office, it must appear what the nature of the office is the party seeks to enforce his admission or restoration to; and for this reason the Court refused a mandamus to swear one who was elected to be one of the eight men of Ashburn, because it did not appear upon the affidavits. (Anon., 2 Mod. 316; Bull. N. P. 199; see per Lord Ellenborough, in Re v. Oxford, 7 East, 351).

It must likewise appear that there has been a default, for where a duty is imposed by office, an omission to perform it will not be presumed. (Re v. The Borough of St. Ives, Man. & G. 3; Bull. N. P. 199). And, in a mandamus to restore, the party must make out a prima facie title to the office, and shew at least that he has complied with all the forms necessary to constitute his right, and lay such facts before the Court as will warrant them in presuming that the right is in him, and if he omit to state such facts as shew the ground of his title, the Court will not grant the writ. (Re v. Totham, 3 T. R. 577).

The affidavit also must be positive and certain as to the facts stated, and not upon information and belief only, otherwise the Court will not grant a rule, or, at all events, in the first instance. For where, upon motion for a mandamus to the warden of the Vintners' Company to swear J. S., one of the court of assistants, the affidavit stated that "he was informed by some of the court of assistants, that he was elected," and no positive evidence was given of his having been elected, the Court granted a rule nisi only in the first instance, and at the same time said that if there had been a positive affidavit of election they would have granted a writ in the first instance. It seems questionable whether the Court would have ever granted a rule to shew cause, unless there had been an affidavit that the party applying had made application to inspect the books in order to see whether he were elected and was refused. (Re v. The Vintners' Company, Mich., 25 Geo. 2; Bull. N. P. 200; Re v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1266).

Where there is a corporation by prescription, the constitution of it (as well as the parties' right) must be verified by affidavit. (Bull. N. P. 200). Where it is by charter, a copy of it must be produced at the time of making the motion. And in an application for a mandamus to the steward of a manor to enrol a deed of disposition under the provisions of the act for the abolition of fines and recoveries, (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s.

73), a copy of the deed should be annexed to, or the contents should be set out in, the affidavit; but the latter, it seems, would suffice. (Crosby v. Fortescue, 5 Dow, 273). But where a mandamus is applied for to compel an overseer to deliver up books, &c. belonging to the parish, he having rendered himself incompetent to serve in consequence of a conviction under the Poor-law Amendment Act of a misapplication of the public monies, the conviction must be annexed to the affidavits in support of the rule. (Re v. Simms, 4 Dowl. 294; 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 97).

If any defect should appear upon the face of the affidavits, the Court will not allow them to be read, such as an omission to state that the party before whom they were sworn was a commissioner of the court. (Re v. Hare, 13 East, 189). Therefore, where, on shewing cause against a rule, it appeared that the affidavits in answer were dated and sworn before a commissioner of the Court of King's Bench, but contained no place in the jurat where sworn; on an objection being taken to them on that account, the Court refused to permit their being read, and made the rule absolute for the mandamus. (Re v. The Justices of York, 3 M. & S. 494; see The Kennet Company v. Jones, 7 T. R. 451). It appears to have been questionable whether or not affidavits on an application for a mandamus required stamping. The 5 Geo. 4, c. 41, repealing the stamp duties on legal proceedings, not applying to cases of this description. (Reg. v. Lichfield, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 453; In re Templeman, 9 Dowl. 962). However, all doubts on that point have since been put an end to by a recent statute, (4 & 5 Vict. c. 34), which enacts, that after the passing of that act the duty on affidavits to be used in the courts of Westminster, &c. shall be deemed to have been repealed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 41, upon all affidavits whatsoever to be used in the said courts. (See Reg. v. Lichfield, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 455). It may here be observed, that on shewing cause against a rule for quashing a return no affidavits will be allowed to be read. (Re v. Harbour Trustees, 4 Jur. 50).

The affidavits being prepared should then be ingrossed and sworn in court, or before a commissioner. Briefs should then be made and delivered to counsel, and a consultation had, if thought necessary, before the rule is applied for.

THE principles on which are founded the claims of the Bar to remuneration for their services, if there be any such claims, have often engaged our consideration. And we have long been satisfied, that a thorough examination into and exposition of them, and the consequent manifestation to the public of the true professional status of the Bar as it is at present constituted, would be advisable, in order that correct ideas of that status being obtained, it may be decided by the Bar and the public whether it is adapted to the existing state of society; whether it ought to receive no change at all, or whether it ought to receive any and what modifications. We have, however, as conductors of this Journal, always shrunk from the subject, principally because, as ourselves members of the Bar, professional education and habits render any discussion involving questions of the pecuniary rights or claims of the Bar, one as disagreeable to us, personally, as we conceive it would be to most members of the Bar.

But the circumstances that are recorded in the public journals to have taken place at Lincoln's Inn on the 14th*, have brought the subject so prominently before the public, that we think it behoves us now, casting aside all false delicacy and all fear of misconstruction of our motives, to sift the question to the very bottom, and to shew that the honorary character of the Bar, and its liability to serve the public, without reference to the payment of fees, go much further than many suppose, and much further than is asserted by the vote alleged to have been passed by the Bar meeting of the 13th, negating the right of a counsellor to refuse briefs from parties who have not paid fees antecedently due, either to him or to any other counsel.

The rule that regulates the position of a counsellor, broadly stated, we assert, and will shew to be, this:—He is bound to accept a brief or to prepare pleadings on behalf of any member of the public who chooses to retain him through the proper channel. In practice it is usually, and both justly and wisely, considered that he ought not to be called upon to hold a brief, unless an adequate fee is paid with it. But this is a mere practice, and not a consequence of any positive rule—a practice founded on the very reasonable assumption, that if fees were not paid, few would enter into, or few entering into would remain in, the Profession. But the strict principle on which the existence of the Bar, as constituted in England, rests is, that the counsellor is bound to protect, in courts of justice, the interest of the person who first causes him to be retained in the regular mode, that is, by instructions given to him by an attorney; and the payment of a fee is a condition on which we shall shew that the counsellor cannot, in strictness, insist either before or after the taking of the brief. We say that he is not entitled, at any time or in any form, to any remuneration. He may quit the Bar if he finds that clients will not so far value his advocacy as to present him with an honorarium. But while at the Bar he has no more right to refuse to receive a brief and argue the case, or to draw pleadings, because a fee is not paid with his papers, than he has to recover a fee after he has argued the case or drawn the pleadings.

That this is so, is proved in two ways. First, the very definition given by the most learned writers of the functions of a counsellor, is absolutely inconsistent with any notion of his being entitled to demand any remuneration at any time. "A counsellor's fees," says Blackstone, (vol. 3, p. 28), "are given, not as locatio vel conductio, but as quiddam honorarium; not as a salary or hire, but as a mere gratuity, which a counsellor

* See The Times, 17th May.

lor cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation." And the language of Sir John Davies, (Rep. Pref. p. 22), quoted with approbation by the very learned annotator of Co. Litt. 295. a., n. 1, is still clearer. "The fees to counsellors are not in the nature of wages or pay, or that which we call salary or hire, which are duties certain, and grow due by contract for labour or service; but what is given him is honorarium, not merces, being a gift which gives honour as well to the taker as the giver; nor is it certain or contracted, for no price or rate can be set upon counsel, which is invaluable and inestimable, so as it is more or less according to the circumstances, namely, the ability of the client, the worthiness of the counsellor, the weightiness of the cause, and the custom of the country. It is a gift of such a nature that the able client may not neglect to give it without ingratitude, for it is but a gratuity or taking of thankfulness; yet the worthy counsellor may not demand it without doing wrong to his reputation, according to that moral rule, multa honesta accipi possunt quæ tamen peti non possunt." If the doctrine thus laid down and never hitherto disputed, is true, the fee is clearly a present; and the very term implies in the donor a right to give or to withhold it. For if he is bound to give it in order to obtain services, it is no longer a present; it is a compulsory payment,—a price bargained for before the services can be rendered. Now, it is admitted, that a counsellor is bound, subject to certain exceptions, which will be presently noticed, to take a brief; but if he is not bound to take it unless a fee is paid with it, then he has power to enforce, in some form, payment of a fee; and, if so, the payment of a fee would not be a present, which it is admitted it is. If, then, a counsellor is bound to take a brief, provided it is tendered through the proper channel, it is clear, that the true rule of the Bar is, that he cannot demand a fee at any time: in other words, he cannot make the antecedent payment of a fee a condition of his accepting a brief or drawing pleadings.

Now, that he is generally bound to accept a brief, is, as we have said, admitted; and that it must be so on principles of public policy, is, we think, to be shewn without much difficulty.

Counsellors alone are permitted to sign pleadings, and, as advocates, to address courts of justice. That is well settled. Unless, therefore, a litigant can obtain the services of a counsellor, he cannot have access to a court of justice at all, for he cannot even put his pleadings on record. But if he could, he cannot employ as an advocate any person skilled in the law. Now, if any one counsellor could refuse to act for a particular person, so might any other, and so might all, and the result would be, that the litigant might be altogether unable to bring his case before the Court. Hence it must be, and in fact is, recognised by the Bar, as the condition on which every counsellor holds his right of pre-audience, that he shall be bound to appear for any person who in the regular mode instructs him.

But it may be said, if that is the condition on which the Bar holds its exclusive right of pre-audience, it must be implied, that a counsellor's liability to hold any man's brief must draw with it a right to have a remuneration with that brief; for that otherwise the Bar would be incurring a heavy liability in return for a worthless monopoly. The answer is, the worth of the monopoly, if pecuniary return alone is to be considered as worthy, is the expectation of the honoraria, the presents that honourable and grateful clients will unquestionably give; and the expectation of promotion to judicial offices; but there is also in the monopoly that value which was the only reward of the early Roman advocates,—the influence obtained by the exercise of the exclusive right and power of protecting clients.

The second ground, on which we contend that the rule of the Bar is as we state it, is drawn from admitted rules of practice.

When it is said that a counsellor must, in order to be bound to take a brief, be retained with the payment of a fee, the question is, what fee? to which it is answered, A proper fee. And the reply is, What is a proper fee? There is, we assert, no rule whatever on the subject. There are rules made by the Courts that a victorious party shall not be allowed, in taxation of costs, for the honorarium he has thought fit to give to his counsel, more than certain regular amounts. But that is a rule made for the protection of the party, not of the counsel.

There is also a rule of etiquette among the Bar, that a counsellor may not take a less fee for any brief held in open court than a guinea, or, for pleadings, less than a guinea for so many folios. But that rule is not a positive rule even of etiquette, that counsel shall have a guinea, and may refuse to act without his guinea, but simply that he may not accept an honorarium less in amount. Beyond this there is not even the shadow of a rule. It may be customary that a counsellor shall not be asked, and no able and just client ever would of course ask him, to argue a heavy case, requiring, perhaps, days of research, for a guinea or for any other inadequate fee: but there is not even a custom which says, how many guineas counsel shall have. The total absence, therefore, of any rule, by which to judge of the amount of what is a proper fee, shews that the client's will alone can measure it; in effect, that there is no rule entitling counsel to see that a fee is paid before taking a brief.

A difficulty is thought to exist in this, that it is admitted there must be exceptions to the rule obliging a counsellor to take a brief, and that there is nothing to shew that, among those exceptions, is not the neglect of the client to have paid fees for former business, or for the brief tendered. This difficulty is disposed of easily. As the principle of the rule is, that the counsellor is bound to advocate gratuitously the cause of any member of the community, relying for his reward only on the gratitude of his clients, because of his moral obligation to the public resulting from his accepting an exclusive right of pre-audience, so the principle on which any exception to the rule can be based, must be one of moral obligation only, and not one involving the question of remuneration at all.

A counsellor may reject a brief to prosecute his father, or to fix fraud upon his mother, because he could not hold such a brief without an infraction of a moral law paramount to his moral liability to the general public, or, at least, without an outrage on the feelings of mankind so gross, as to ground a presumption, that the execution of such a duty was never intended to be a part of the contract between him and the public. But the non-payment of a fee cannot be held one of the exceptions, unless on the assumption that the payment was a duty, instead of what it is, a purely voluntary donation.

On the whole we conclude, that the profession of the Bar is purely honorary; that a counsellor may not refuse a brief, with reference to any ground referring to fees on that or on any other business; that he is utterly and totally, in the matter of money remuneration, at the mercy of his clients. This should be thoroughly and generally known. If it is not intended by the Bar that such should be their position, they should determine what it ought to be, and, if they can, enforce their determination. If it is intended, then we ought never more to have the peace of the Bar, and the nerves of either public companies or private solicitors, shaken and disturbed by appeals to the Attorney-General, and meetings of the Bar, on matters connected with the payment or non-payment of fees.

We believe it to be the interest of the public that the position of the Bar should remain as we have stated it to be. But assuming that to be so, it is equally the interest of the public and their representatives to remember, that if the worthy counsellor may not without hurt to his reputation demand a fee, so the able client cannot, without grievous hurt to his reputation, refuse or neglect to give it.

In one Vol. 8vo., price 18s. boards.

The LAW and PRACTICE of SUMMARY CONVICTIONS on PENAL STATUTES by JUSTICES OF THE PEACE; including Proceedings preliminary and subsequent to Conviction, and on Appeal and Removal. Also, the Responsibility and Indemnity of convicting Magistrates and their Officers. With an Appendix of Practical Forms and Precedents of Convictions. Third Edition. By E. E. DEACON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

This day is published, in One thick Vol. 8vo., price 1l. 16s. boards, DICKINSON'S GUIDE to the QUARTER SESSIONS. A Practical Guide to the Quarter Sessions, and other Sessions of the Peace; with Forms of Indictment, &c. OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, MAY 27, 1848.

If the consideration of the defective state of the Law of Patents should again, as we trust it will before long, come under the revision of Parliament, we hope that, among the improvements that will be adopted, will be the withdrawal from the letters-patent of the proviso introduced under a notion of policy into all patents, avoiding them if they shall become vested in more than twelve persons as partners.

The clause is usually, we may say invariably as follows:—"That if at any time hereafter these our letters-patent, or the liberties and privileges hereby by us granted, shall become vested in or in trust for more than the number of twelve persons, or their representatives, at any one time as partners, dividing or entitled to divide the benefits or profits obtained by reason of these our letters-patent," then the letters-patent to become void.

Until the year 1832 the number in whom a patent might be vested was limited to five, and the notion of policy on which the restriction was and is founded, is that there might be danger to the public by the vesting of a monopoly in the hands of a powerful company. Whether this was a well-founded apprehension of danger in the days when the Statute of Monopolies was passed, and when patents were identified in the public mind with monopolies of articles of daily consumption, that had long been known and had become actual necessities, we shall not stop to inquire. But in the present day, and as applied to monopolies granted for the creation at vast expense and risk of new trades, for that is the true character of patents at this day, we say that the notion of any danger to the public by such monopolies falling into the hands of powerful partnerships is wholly unfounded, and that the restriction built upon it operates simply as a great hardship on patentees; a heavy tax on inventive industry; and, consequently, a great mischief to the public.

Those who have had the good fortune as professional men, or those who, as patentees or speculators in patents, have had the ill fortune to be much engaged in patent transactions, are well aware that, with the completion of the grant, expensive as that is, a patentee's troubles and anxieties and risks are but beginning. It may confidently be asserted, that no invention of any real importance is ever brought into public use, so as to produce profitable employment of capital to the patentee or his assignees, without a preliminary outlay of money scarcely ever less than 2000*l.*—frequently exceeding 10,000*l.* A cursory examination of the evidence adduced in support of the application, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (see Webster's Pat. Cas.) for prolongation of patents, will abundantly bear out this assertion. Now, many patents, and of course most particularly those affecting the most expensive and complicated machines and processes, are thought to be accompanied by too much risk to be taken up as commercial speculations by single-handed speculators, or even by small firms; and it frequently happens, and from the very nature of the subject must happen, that, unless such patents are taken up by companies, they cannot be taken up at all, and they do, in fact, if the patronage of a company cannot be obtained, sink into oblivion. If there could be any practical danger in any case to the public in the possession of a monopoly (limited as is that granted by letters-patent) by a numerous and powerful company, it is almost demonstrable that the case of danger never would arise, because the only case of danger would be where the working out of the patent would require but moderate capital and risk, and the invention might, therefore, be advantageously brought into use by less powerful bodies than companies. In such cases, it is quite certain that the monopoly never will fall into the hands of a company, because no man at all rationally advised, will ever subject the working of a patent to the costly machinery of a company, if he finds it capable of being worked by the more economical, and, therefore, more profitable, machinery of individual enterprise. It is, then, only those which may be termed the heavy inventions,—those which can scarcely be brought into operation at all by individual enterprise, that fall into the hands of companies: and it is difficult to see how the public can be hurt by companies doing, in the way of manufacturing industry, that which without their aid would not be done at all. But, in addition to these reasons, it may be confidently added, that the fear of “raising prices of commodities at home, or hurting trade” (21 Jac. 1, c. 3, s. 5) by entrusting the possession of patents to companies, is at this day purely chimerical. The doctrines of political economy are now too well understood for any company to suppose, that it increases its own profits permanently by claiming inordinate prices. And in such matters as inventions, in which the success of a patent only stimulates the competition of other inventors, no prudent possessor of a patent will ever push his monopoly to such an extent as to operate as a sensible oppression on the public, and thereby to stimulate rivalry in invention, if not actual and immediate hostility to his legal right. In practice, too, it is well known, that the provision against vesting a patent in more than twelve persons, is always to be got over if the parties think the subject-matter worth the expense of an act of Parliament, which is scarcely ever opposed, and never refused if not opposed; so that the only real effect of the proviso is, to subject patents for important inventions, or at least for inventions accompanied with sufficient risk and expense in their own nature, as it were to a mortgage debt, at the very outset of their career.

WE have received several communications on the subject of our leading article of the 20th instant, and the examples that we print in another part of this Journal, in order that our readers may see the arguments on both sides, will sufficiently shew, that what we have stated as the rule of the Bar, is considered at the least startling. Nevertheless, we re-assert that it is the rule; and we discuss the subject for the last time, partly because some parts of our former argument have been misunderstood, and partly to refute some of the arguments used against the doctrine we have supported. And, first, it seems to be assumed that we have meant to say that Barristers expect and ought to work for nothing. Now we never said, nor ever meant, anything of the kind. What we have said is, that Barristers do not assert a right to any remuneration; that they hold themselves bound to work without stipulating either before or after undertaking the work for any specific remuneration; that they hold themselves bound to rely on the gratitude of their clients;—Does it follow that they expect no gratitude to be evinced? Does it follow, that, because able clients may not be bargained with, that there is no moral obligation upon them to requite the services of the Barrister who has given them the result of his labour and talent? It is quite consistent with the repudiation of all right, of all positive claim to remuneration, to expect from clients compliance with the moral obligation honourably to requite services rendered, though no such requital be or may be demanded. There is, in the intercourse between man and man, a multitude of instances, in which it is the admitted duty of one man to give his services without the remotest claim to reward, where, nevertheless, he to whom the service is rendered will be held guilty of the breach of a moral duty, if he does not tender such reward as is suitable to his own position and that of the recipient, as freely as the service was tendered. In such positions, though a man repudiates any title or claim to stipulate for a reward for his labour, he may rationally labour in the expectation of a reward; and, therefore, the assertion, that the rule of the Bar is, that they are bound to work without demanding or stipulating for fees, is by no means an assertion that they expect to work habitually for nothing.

It is quite true that from our doctrine this consequence follows, that the Bar are bound to work for nothing if clients will give them nothing. But this is no more than a disagreeable consequence, which may follow the rules by which the Bar thinks fit to govern itself; and the argument resulting from it, is disposed of in the same way as the argument resulting from the disagreeable consequences following the rules to which men in other professions submit themselves, viz. by saying that if a man does not like such consequences he can quit his profession; but that while he remains a member of it, he must submit to them.

In the army, for instance, an officer binds himself to be guided by rules of discipline and etiquette, which may have very disagreeable consequences. Such was the case of an artillery officer who many years ago being on a station where the people were Catholics, was ordered to fire a salute in honour of some procession, which he, being a very strict and devout Protestant, thought idolatrous. The rule of the profession was clear—obedience. The officer did not deny the existence of the rule, because its consequence were disagreeable, but he took the only course that was open to him, if he would not comply with the rule,—he quitted the profession.

To say that a rule cannot be a rule because it may have disagreeable consequences, is in fact little better than nonsense. The members of a profession may make rules more or less adapted to the circumstances in which they live; the consequences to individual members may be more or less unpleasant or disastrous; but while the rules remain, the members are bound by them so long as they remain members; of course no longer; and we have never pretended that a Barrister may not quit the bar.

Then, it is argued, or rather assumed, that the consequence of the doctrine stated by us must be, that Barristers will be regularly and usually called upon to labour for nothing. There are two answers to this argument or assumption. Firstly, it is based upon another and totally irrational assumption, that all or the majority of clients would adopt as a system, the plan of profiting by a rule by which a profession refuses to demand remuneration, for the purpose of taking from them habitually important services, and giving no return. The total improbability of any body of professional men adopting such a course of proceeding systematically, makes it really a waste of space gravely to reason upon the argument. But secondly, what is the fact in practice? Is it not notorious that three-fourths of all the business done by the Bar, is done trusting to the honour of the client? That the good old practice of giving a fee with a brief is often followed, we do not deny; it would be better if it were more frequently followed. But it is not to be denied, that, between the feeling that to either a client of known respectability or to an unknown client, it would be an insult to refuse to trust to his honour; and the feeling, that to appear too thoughtful about fees, is derogatory to the Barrister, the Bar as a body do in fact trust to the honour of their clients, as the most agreeable, or, at any rate, the least troublesome course.

The Bar is, therefore, practically, in the same position as if the doctrine laid down by us were as fully and specifically acknowledged, as we believe it must be, wherever fully examined. Under this practice, many men at the Bar do, nevertheless, continue to realize considerable professional incomes, and, under this system, or any system, however wildly honorary in theory, a considerable number will always continue to do so, simply because the services of able Advocates are wanted; because, it is perfectly well understood that able Advocates expect, though they do not insist upon fees, and would quit the profession if fees and adequate fees were not given; and because the working portion of the body of Solicitors, like the working portion of every other body of men of business, contains and must contain, even in this our fallen state, sufficient honour and right feeling, to shrink from systematically taking men's aid without a return.

Whatever may be however the propriety of the rule of the Bar with reference to the existing state of society; whether it would be better that the Bar should give up altogether the position of a profession in theory wholly honorary, and should adopt the practice of working for stipulated and recoverable remuneration; whether it should take a medium course, and say it may stipulate beforehand, but have no title to recover if the fee be not insisted upon as a condition precedent: these questions we will not further discuss, although we have an opinion upon them. But we confidently reassert, that while the doctrine of the Bar is, as it is, that the fee is not a merces, but a gratuity; while in practice it recoils in horror, and properly so, from the notion of stipulating, (which implies disputing if need be), what the amount of a fee shall be; while it asserts, and properly, its irresponsibility as to the righteousness of a cause, or its issue; while it asserts, as it properly does and must, as one of the consequences of that irresponsibility, its liability to take a brief on behalf of any of the Queen's subjects;—it must, as an inevitable consequence of these positions, assert, that though the fee may and ought to be expected, it cannot be insisted upon, any more as a condition preceding the acceptance of a brief, than as a consequence of having held it. And with these remarks we shall close finally, probably to the satisfaction of our readers, certainly to our own, our discussion of the question of fees.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—After maturely considering your recent article on the Bar, and the results of my own observation and intuition, I conclude that Barristers, like Angels, may be divisible into two classes—that to which it is my fortune to belong answering to the damned Spirits of the pneumatology. Perhaps, in this division, is to be found a solution of the antiquarian doubts as to the true characteristics of Utter and Inner Barristers—the former doing, or being ready to do, quiddam pro quodam, the others doing nihil—pro nihilo. However this may be, there can be little doubt that my branch of their represents the old Serjeants Counters, who were formerly entitled to exclusive audience in the King's courts. In Andrew Horne's Mirror of Justice (cap. 2, sect. 5), they are thus described:—"Counters are serjeants skilful in the laws of the realm, who are the common people to declare and defend adversus judgment, for those who have need of them, for their fees." He mentions four things to which every pleader of others' causes ought to have a regard: "The fourth thing is his salary, concerning which four things are to be regarded: 1. The greatness of the cause. 2. The pains of the serjeant. 3. His worth (as his learning, eloquence, and gift). 4. The usage of the Court." The monopoly of these Counters survived in the Common Pleas to our own time. In the King's Bench it was destroyed by an ordinance of Edward I, admitting "seven score apprentices" to practise there. What was the origin of the forensic chivalry of whom Sir John Davies and Blackstone speak, and under whose banner I do not profess to fight, is more than I can say. Possibly they may be traced to the mother of the Gracchi. But I worship as the founders and heroes of my race the seven score apprentices of the English Justinian; and it is remarkable that whenever the judges speak of counsel, they seem to have my mercenary tribe exclusively in view. Thus, in delivering the opinion of the Court on the taxation of an attorney's bill, (Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 550), Bayley, J., thus expressed himself:—"But then the suggestion is, that, by law, no man is liable to pay for counsel at all, and the

therefore the whole of this charge for counsel is improper. That seems to me to arise entirely from a mistake in point of law. It is never expected,—it never has been the practice, and in many instances it would be wrong,—that counsel should be gratuitously giving up their time and talents without receiving any recompense or reward. It is the recompense and reward which induce men of considerable ability, and certainly of great integrity, and with every qualification which is necessary to adorn the Bar, to exert their talents. It is the emolument in the first instance, to a certain degree, that induces them to bear the difficulties of their profession, and to wear away their health, which a long attendance at the bar naturally produces; and it is of advantage to the public that they should receive those emoluments which produce integrity and independence; and I know of nothing more likely to destroy that independence and integrity than to deprive them of the honourable reward of their labours. But it is said that counsel can maintain no action for their fees. Why? Because it is understood that their emoluments are not to depend upon the event of the cause, but that their compensation is to be equally the same, whether the event be successful or unsuccessful. They are to be paid beforehand, because they are not to be left to the chance whether they shall ultimately get their fees or not; and it is for the purpose of promoting the honour and integrity of the Bar that it is expected all their fees should be paid at the time when their briefs are delivered. That is the reason why they are not permitted to maintain an action. It is their duty to take care, if they have fees, that they have them beforehand, and, therefore, the law will not allow them any remedy if they disregard their duty in that respect. The same rule applies to the case of a physician, who cannot maintain any action for his fees. He, therefore, is to receive his fees at the period of time when his attendance occurs. These are the reasons why the gentlemen of these two professions can maintain no action for their fees; but is it to be supposed that men are to waste their lives to qualify themselves for their profession, without receiving any emolument? That never can be imagined; and the constant course which has been adopted shews that it never could be so understood. If this is not the right rule, the Courts of Westminster Hall have been in error for centuries, because they have been in the constant habit of allowing to plaintiffs when they succeed the fees of counsel on the one hand, and to the defendant the fees of their counsel when they succeed on the other hand. This is the invariable rule acted upon as the taxation of costs."

These are exactly my sentiments. I studied for the law, and I now practise at it, principally with a view to the fees. I did not, and do not, shut my eyes to what are called the more elevating incidents and attributes of the profession, any more than in choosing my waistcoat I overlooked the pattern; but I selected and follow my profession for a livelihood, as I bought and wear my waistcoat for a garment. If you ask me how poor men are to get counsel, I could refer you to the established practice in favour of pauper suitors, the customary almsmen of our legal monastery; but, in my present humour, I would rather you would refer the question to your baker, substituting for the luxury, litigation, the necessary, bread.

I have nearly lost sight of my main object, which is to remind the attorneys who have read your article, that refers to a class wholly distinct from the dwellers in the Temple and Lincoln's Inn, and to beg them not to bring to me or to any of my tribe any papers wanting the usual indorsement of an honorarium to the customary amount. My clerk (a constant reader) is in the arm, and wishes to know whether, if I am to act as a mixote, he must be Sancho, with an honorarium equivalent to Barataria and the bill of exchange for three ass-colta. At the same time, I make the public and the attorneys freely welcome to take the advocates-errant at their word. If giver and receiver are equally honoured when the honorarium passes, they must, I think, be as much so when it is withheld, the counsel's services, and not the guineas, being, in that case, the "twice blessed" vehicle of glory, which, as they are freely offered, should be as freely accepted, magnanimity shewing itself as much in receiving as in conferring a favour.

A friend of mine, (indeed, a fellow mercenary), taking up the question with some warmth, thus writes to me, and, I think, effectually demolishes the ornamental or classical part of Blackstone's argument for honorary services. In fact, the authorities cited in Butler's note to Co. Litt. 295. a., shew that, at Rome, under the Emperors, and formerly in France, advocates might sue for their fees. How far the present rule of the Profession, that fees, though debts, are debts of honour merely, is founded on good policy, is a question into which I do not enter. I think I can see sound reasons for it; and no doubt our own Bar would not have established and adhered to the rule, nor would the French Bar have abolished the old practice of suing for fees, and resisted with such obstinacy the attempts of the Parliament of Paris to revive that practice, (see Berryer's account of Linguet's case), if they had not some more substantial ground to go upon than that taken up by Davies and Blackstone.

"I think that the article has rendered a service to the Profession. By pushing the absurd cant about the quiddam honorarium to its utmost limits, the writer applies to it that test under which so many unsound doctrines have broken down.

"As to the authority of the old pedants among the earlier English lawyers who are cited in support of the position, that the counsellor 'is not entitled at any time, or in any form, to any remuneration,' I do not attach one particle more of weight to it than I should to their authority in support of witchcraft, and their right to burn witches. Indeed, I think I have seen Lady Davies, the wife of the Sir John Davies, Blackstone's great authority, spoken of more than once in Stafford's letters and dispatches, as being herself either a witch or a prophetess. And one can understand, that the same spirit which led her ladyship to prophesy, and her husband to burn witches, would arm the latter with arguments to shew why witches ought to be burnt, and why 'the worthy counsellor may not demand the fees [which he has earned] without doing wrong to his reputation.'

"It is the characteristic of pedants of all descriptions to be the slaves of words and forms, instead of making, like men, words and forms slaves to them. The poor Austrian military pedant, who dressed his men and made them handle their arms and carry their heads exactly after the fashion of Frederic the Great, was surprised to find himself beaten by a young man named Napoleon Buonaparte, who appeared to set all rules of art at defiance. Frederic had equally set at naught the rules of former authorities. The notion of a counsellor or counsellor giving his services gratuitously to his client is a specimen of the consequence of transplanting a custom or an institution from a state of society to which it is adapted to one to which it is not. Every man of average common sense who looks into the question must see the grossness of the absurdity of applying the relation subsisting between counsel and client in the earlier period of the Roman history to the condition of England at present.

"The Roman aristocracy, or rather oligarchy, not only formed the legislators and the military leaders, but the lawyers and the priesthood. In Rome there was, strictly speaking, no middle class. The plebeians were ranged under the protection (which implied under the power too) of the various great patrician families. Thus the power of the Roman noble depended very much on the number of his clients or followers. That a man might grow dangerous by this means appears to have become evident, from the attempt to pass such laws as the Lex Fabia de ambitu, vel numero sektorum. In return for the support which the patrician patron received from his body of clients, he naturally and necessarily (for a plebeian could not become acquainted with the laws at that time) gave his clients the benefit of his knowledge and skill as a jurisconsult and an advocate. The patrician made use of his client's votes to obtain lucrative offices, and still more lucrative military commands. When he obtained a military command, many of his clients were incorporated into his legions, and bled and toiled as none but Roman soldiers have ever toiled, that he might enrich himself with the spoils of a conquered province, and enjoy the honours of a triumph. Not to dwell upon innumerable minor instances (see Heineccii Historia Juris Romani and Gravinae Origines) Plutarch expressly mentions that Julius Cæsar obtained great popularity by aiding at trials with his eloquence. The quiddam honorarium, that he had in his eye, was not a fee, (paltry to him, though it had even been greater than the greatest any English counsel ever received), but the sovereignty of the world. Can any absurdity exceed that of assimilating this case to that of a poor devil of an English barrister first toiling, almost like the Roman soldier client just mentioned, to learn his profession, living, as Lord Eldon said, 'like a hermit, and working like a horse;' and then exercising this professional knowledge so laboriously and studiously acquired, not for clients who were themselves beggars, yet had votes which could give him the dominion of the world, but for rich men, or richer bodies of men, or at least for clients between whom and himself there existed no relation whatever, except that of the one seeking for legal knowledge, and the other possessing that knowledge, the fruit of ten times the labour that any Roman patrician ever gave to such an attainment? The doctrine, in its origin, at Rome, was based on a substantial reality. In England it never was anything but a stupid and servile fiction. Even at Rome it speedily became obsolete, as the accurate Heineccius takes care to explain: — 'Quum ergo initio e patriciis suis quisque clientibus de jure responderet: postea omnibus consulentibus promiscue se dare ceperunt, et quiddam mercede conducti: et inde obsolevit antiquum illud jus patronatus, natiq; sunt Jureconsulti, qui jam responderunt de jure, causasq; egerunt, atque adeo omnia, quæ olim patronorum fuerunt, in se transferebant officia. Et hinc facile reddi poterit ratio, cur plerique Jureconsulti veteres ordinis fuerunt patricii? Cur patroni dicti, qui causas agebant? Cur Jureconsulti atque Advocati eos, a quibus adhibebantur in consilium clientes vocarint? Cur jure veteri et per legem Cinciam [i. e. in the time of the Commonwealth, when ambitious patrons and venal voters were jealous of the rising class of professional jurisconsults,] gratuitum esse oporteret Advocatorum officium?' [Heinecc. Antiq. Rom. Jurisp. l. 2, 29]. So much for Blackstone's learned argument for the honorarium, in opposition to locatio vel conductio, drawn from the analogy of the Roman practice."

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A BARRISTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—In the article in the number dated May 20th, relative to counsels' fees, (doubtless a difficult and delicate question), you have, I fear, in your anxiety to maintain the independence of the Bar, somewhat over-stepped the bounds of reason, if not of fact. You boldly assert, "that counsel are not entitled at any time, or in any form, to any remuneration;" and, as a corollary to that proposition, you say, that "counsel are not at liberty to refuse a brief when offered through the proper channel." From that, as a general rule, I do not dissent; but it is subject to some exceptions: one you admit to be usual in practice, viz. provided an adequate fee is paid with it. This, however, you say "is mere practice, and not a consequence of any positive rule,—a practice founded on the very reasonable assumption, that if fees were not paid few would enter into the Profession, or few entering into it, would remain in the Profession;" so that, if an adequate fee is not given with the brief, few would receive it; whereas if your rule be the right one, all must receive briefs, even if offered without any fee at all.

But to the proofs you adduce in support of your theory: the words of Blackstone which you quote, "Counselor's fees are given, not locatio vel conductio, but as quiddam honorarium, not as salary or hire, but as a mere gratuity which a counsellor cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation," prove to my mind no more than this: that fees cannot be recovered by legal process, and should a barrister demand his fees, his reputation would suffer. "Demand" is a technical and strong word, and here evidently used in a legal sense. Your next quotation is from the notes in Coke on Littleton, concluding with the words, "It (the fee to counsel) is of such a nature that the able client may not neglect to give it without ingratitude, for it is but a gratuity or taking of thankfulness; yet the worthy counsellor may not demand it without doing wrong to his reputation, according to that moral rule, multa honesta accipi possunt quæ tamen peti non sunt*." From this you at once conclude, that the fee is a present, because it is here termed a gratuity. There is a distinction between those words,—a present is a mere voluntary gift, resulting from no consideration; a gratuity implies an obligation of some kind between the donor and recipient. A fee appears more naturally to be synonymous with the terms "reward" or "recompense," neither of which can be demanded; but both of which moral obligation tells us to be due for any service rendered, and to the performance of which service the reward or recompense is a condition precedent.

That counsel cannot refuse a brief, provided it come through the proper channel, I do not deny; but I do deny, that the mere expectation of the honoraria which honourable and grateful clients may, or dishonourable and ungrateful clients may not, give, or that the chances of judicial office, or the advocate's monopoly, or the influence resulting from the exclusive right of protecting clients, are, or ought to be, an equivalent for the laborious exercise of professional toil. But, in further support of your theory, you urge, that the monopoly possessed by the Bar would, if that body possessed the power of refusing to sign pleadings, or hold a brief without the tender of a fee, render access to a court of justice impossible;—truly it would, and, in reason and justice, it ought. If a client is able to pay a fee, he ought not to be allowed to shrink from doing so; if he cannot pay, he is allowed the privilege of proceeding in forma pauperis. Are the services of any man to be at the command of another, who may remunerate him or not as he pleases,—who may withhold from him even the compliment of empty thanks? To such a state of serfdom would you reduce the Bar? The clergy have a monopoly of exclusive duties, can they be compelled to perform them unpaid? Can physicians be compelled to prescribe unfees? Are barristers alone to labour without remuneration? Is theirs the only profession to be under compulsion to toil for others gratuitously?

The next ground on which you seek to support your proposition, that since there is no rule by which the adequacy of a fee can be fixed, and that, consequently, its amount is purely discretionary with the client, whence it follows, that the fee may be nil, proves too much even for your own proposition; thus you qualify it by saying, that no able and just client would ever think of asking (asking is, however, out of the question, —it is compulsory to take the brief) a barrister to argue a heavy case for an inadequate fee. But all clients are not able or just: and, although there may not be a custom which says how many guineas counsel shall have, still no man with sufficient self-respect would condescend to take a brief with a fee palpably inadequate, without some satisfactory reason or explanation.

Upon the question whether a brief can be refused because former fees are unpaid, due to the same counsel by the client offering it, I admit the justice of your conclusion, although not the reasoning by which you arrive at it. A brief offered under such circumstances, differs from another, in the important fact, that there may be a suspicion that the same delay or actual non-payment of fees may again occur, and surely the counsel may, in order to secure himself from being again duped or imposed upon, refuse to take the brief unless an adequate fee be offered with it. This would seem to be the rationale of the question, and is supported by the view taken of it by the Solicitor-General, at the late meeting of the Bar in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, who says, "The rule of the Bar has always been, that no brief should be taken unless the fee were paid upon it." Into this the whole question resolves itself, whether the fee be as a gratuity, present, or reward. It is clear, it cannot be recovered after the brief is once taken. Thus, honourable clients give it with the brief. Against dishonourable clients, the only protection counsel have, is to refuse the brief unless accompanied with the fee. Such I would maintain is a rule, by the doption of which no man's reputation, professional or not, would receive the slightest taint. Counsel would not be left at the mercy or caprice of clients; a definite line of conduct would be marked out, to which they might strictly adhere; solicitors would know what was expected of them, and we should be spared such unseemly exhibitions as that which has lately occurred.

SOLICITORS AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS TO THE SHAREHOLDERS.

At the Second Annual General Meeting, held at the Gray's Inn Coffee House, London, on Tuesday, the 30th day of May 1848.

Your Directors have much pleasure, at the conclusion of the Second Year of the Society's existence, in laying before the Shareholders proof of the continued prosperity of the Society's affairs.

Your Directors beg to state, that from the date of their first Report 287 Proposals have been made to the Society, of which 186 have resulted in Policies, covering Assurances amounting to 96,232l. 13s., and producing an annual income of 3225l. 14s. 3d.: three Annuities have also been granted of the value of 775l.

On reference to your Directors' Report of 31st March, 1847, it will be seen that at that date the Society had issued 205 Policies, for sums amounting to 118,692l. 11s., and yielding Annual Premiums to the amount of 3456l. 12s. 3d., and had granted two Annuities of the value of 786l. 10s. 2d.

It will therefore be apparent, that at this time the Society has issued 391 Policies, amounting to 209,925l. 4s., the Premiums on which give an annual income of 6682l. 6s. 6d.—the average amount assured by each Policy being about 540l.; and have granted in all five Annuities of the value of 1561l. 10s. 2d. Of the Policies issued five have expired, and twenty-four have lapsed, the Premiums received on which amounted to 443l. 2s. 9d.

Your Directors are gratified in stating that, notwithstanding the unusual mortality which during the past year pervaded all parts of the kingdom, three deaths only have occurred among the Assured, and the claims arising therefrom amount together to the comparatively small sum of 800l. It may, perhaps, be as well to remark that of the three deaths mentioned, two resulted from the then prevailing epidemic.

No less than 115 Country Solicitors have effected Policies with this Society, and have thus become productive Agents. The larger number of these correspondents are Shareholders; the remainder, though not Members of the Society, enjoy like advantages in regard to Commission on the Business transacted. 250 Medical Referees have been appointed in various parts of the country, and all the arrangements are perfected for the rapid completion of Proposals from any part of the United Kingdom.

In conclusion, your Directors would again remind the Members of the Society that a very large proportion of the Business of Life Assurance is in the hands of Solicitors, and that as this Society already comprises upwards of 500 Members of the Legal Profession, it needs but the combined efforts of the Members to place their Society among the most flourishing Institutions of the kind in the Kingdom.

TAYLOR'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Just published, in 2 vols., royal 8vo., price 2l. 10s. boards.
A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as ADMINISTERED IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND, with Illustrations from the Laws of America and other Foreign States. By JOHN PITT TAYLOR, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"A writer who undertakes, even with the aid of Dr. Greenleaf, to produce a more readable work than Mr. Phillips's, or a more scientific work than Mr. Starkie's, as originally written, or a more useful book of reference for the mere practitioner than Mr. Roscoe's, as edited by Mr. Smirke, undertakes no trifling matter. But Mr. Taylor appears to have formed no undue estimate of his own powers; and although it is not much our custom to go into practical details, we will rapidly indicate the parts, which, independently of his general merits, fully entitle him, in our opinion, to the credit of having made a highly useful contribution to our practical legal literature."—Law Review, May, 1848.

"We heartily congratulate Mr. Taylor on the result of his labours, as they are highly creditable to himself, evincing the mastery of a very difficult branch of law, and calculated to afford valuable assistance to all branches of the profession."—Legal Observer, May, 1848.

"None who are preparing for the office of an advocate should omit to make Mr. Taylor's work a portion of his course of reading. During the five years that we have been keeping this record of the progress of legal literature, our attention has been directed to no more valuable contribution to it than that now before us."—Law Times.

BROOM'S LEGAL MAXIMS: a Selection of Legal Maxims, classified and illustrated, with references to the Civil Law and the American Reports. By HERBERT BROOM, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

"This is not merely a new edition, but rather a new work built on the groundwork of the last. It is a real work. A goodly fruit of rich and careful culture. It is a compendium of law, combining the marrow of its principles and precepts, from which all extraneous and barren offshoots are cut off; comprising all the cases, old and new, that can illustrate, and none that can encumber principles. It is among the few law books that we bind and place permanently for constant use as the handiest shelf of our bookcase."—Law Magazine, May, 1848.

PLATT ON LEASES.—A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF LEASES, with Forms and Precedents. By THOMAS PLATT, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law, Author of "A Practical Treatise on the Law of Covenants."

"Mr. Platt has presented the profession with a full and complete treatise of the whole law and practice relating to leases, accompanied by an ample collection of precedents, and we are glad that the law has fallen into such competent hands, equally in regard to practical experience and professional learning."—Legal Observer.

"The Propositions of Law are clear and precise, well arranged, and supported by full statements of the Cases and Authorities upon which they are founded. The Appendix of Precedents is excellent. These are Leases and Parts of Leases, Clauses, and Powers of Leasing, which seem to supply all the precedent and form which the most varied practice can require."—Daily News.

"This book consists of two large volumes, and is amply entitled to rank as a standard work on the useful and important subject of leases."—Law Magazine.

MARTIN'S CONVEYANCING, by DAVIDSON.

In 5 vols. royal 8vo., price 7l. boards,

THE PRACTICE OF CONVEYANCING, with PRECEDENTS AND FORMS OF ASSURANCE, and PRACTICAL NOTES, as originated by the late THOMAS MARTIN, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law; and continued and completed by CHARLES DAVIDSON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

The First Volume consists of an Introduction, and of an Appendix (just published) containing several additional Precedents. The Second Volume contains a very large collection made by the late Mr. Martin of Common Forms of all the different Clauses of Deeds, Wills, and other Assurances: the Forms are drawn from various sources, and present a very considerable choice to the draftsman. The last Three Volumes and the Appendix to the First, (which are the work of Mr. Davidson) contain entire Precedents of all the Assurances commonly framed by Conveyancers, and with a very large body of Notes, principally relating to the practice of preparing Drafts, and to such points of law as bear immediately on that part of the Conveyancer's duty. It is to this object (the Preparation of Drafts), that the Work has been chiefly directed, and it is conceived, that the precision and uniformity of language in the Precedents, their conciseness, and their having been taken wholly from the most approved Forms, and principally from Drafts recently prepared, must give this book an advantage, for practical purposes, over any collection of Precedents hitherto offered to the Profession.

LONDON, JUNE 10, 1848.

THE legal effect of a final order in insolvency, under the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, has been determined by the Court of Exchequer in the very recent case of *Jacobs v. Hyde. It is now settled, that such order protects not only the person but the property of the petitioner, and, therefore, the frequently debated case of Toomer v. Gingell (3 C. B. 322; 4 D. & L. 182) is overruled.

The question turned upon the construction of the two statutes 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, taken together.

The final order under the former act was for protection of the person and distribution of the estate, and it was expressly declared to be a sufficient plea in bar of an action for a debt contracted before the date of filing the petition, that such petition was duly presented, and such order made. (Sect. 10; and see Cook v. Henson, 1 C. B. 908).

The act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, was passed according to its recital to amend the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116; and by sect. 30, where there is an error in the schedule without fraud, the commissioner may allow it to be amended; and in such case the petitioner shall be "entitled to every benefit and protection of the said recited act and of this act; and the creditor in that behalf shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions made for creditors by the said recited act and by this act." Also, by sect. 74, "nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, affect, or in any manner alter, the provisions of the said recited act, except so far as herein above expressly provided, or except so far as the provisions of the said recited act may be inconsistent with, or at variance with, the provisions of this act."

By sect. 22, however, it is enacted, that "the final order to be made under the provisions of the said act, (5 & 6 Vict.), as amended by this act, shall protect the person of the petitioner from being taken or detained under any process whatever," and the form of the final order given in the Schedule (A., No. 3), is "to protect the person of the said — from being taken," &c.

The main question which arose under these acts was, whether the 10th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, which made the final order under that act a defence to an action for a debt contracted before the filing of the petition was repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. It was not, as we have seen, unless the provisions of the two acts in this respect be inconsistent. If not, they are to be taken together, and a final order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, may be pleaded in bar of an action according to sect. 10 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.

In Toomer v. Gingell the plea was not framed under the 10th section of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, but confined to the final order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. The point as to the repeal of such 10th section, therefore, was not raised, but the Court held that the order under the latter act was not a defence, on the ground that such order is a mere personal protection, and that the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, contains no provision equivalent to sect. 10 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. But in Jacobs v. Hyde, the plea was in the words of such 10th section, and at the trial the order produced had been made under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. The judge who tried the cause ruled that the plea was not supported by the evidence, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff. A rule for a new trial, however, was granted, after consideration, by the Court, on the ground that the legal effect of the order under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, is for the protection of the person and distribution of the property; and that, in this respect, it is unaffected by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; that the two statutes must be taken together; and that the case of Toomer v. Gingell cannot be supported.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, JUNE 17, 1848.

AMONG the defects of our criminal jurisprudence there is one which has hitherto but little attracted the notice of lawyers, probably because it is one which exhibits itself only after the purely legal operations of a criminal trial have been brought to a close. We allude to the absence of all jurisdiction for reversing a verdict and judgment erroneously given, and for compensating the person improperly condemned and punished. A flagrant instance of this has occurred in a case which must be fresh in the recollection of most persons, of a man being found guilty of a crime, adjudged to be transported, and transported accordingly; after all which, it was conclusively established to the satisfaction of the authorities, that he was innocent. Accordingly he obtained a free pardon, and might have returned if he thought fit, and, we believe, might have been brought back at the expense of the State, to England. There, however, his right stopped. He preferred remaining in the colony to which he had been transported; but not only had he no right to any compensation, but it was with extreme difficulty, and, as we believe, principally from the absence of distinct jurisdiction, that the proper authorities could be induced, as a matter of grace, to allow a most moderate sum to enable the man's family to proceed to join him.

This, we conceive, to be a most defective state of the law. Every one knows that, technically, a pardon implies previous guilt. It makes the offender, according to Blackstone, "a new man." It acquits him of "all corporal penalties and forfeitures annexed to that offence for which he obtains his pardon: it does not so much restore his former, as give him a new credit and capacity." In fact, it does not declare that the pardoned never was a guilty man, but, assuming his guilt, washes it out, and by grace converts as it were the old criminal into a new innocent. Every one knows also that, practically, a pardon does not restore a man to his former position of credit and character. It requires a perpetual explanation of its grounds; a perpetual refutation of the implied charge of crime; and the trial and conviction having been public and solemn, while the proceedings to establish the innocence are wholly or partially secret, and conducted by persons more or less irresponsible, the minds of men will not accept the fact of a pardon, coupled even with the public statement of a Secretary of State, that proved innocence was the ground of the pardon, as such proof of innocence as will wholly obliterate from their minds suspicion of the character of the person implicated. Hence, when a man is unjustly convicted and punished, and pardoned as fully as the Crown can pardon, he has still endured at the hands of the State a gross injustice, for which no remedy or compensation is accessible to him.

It will not do to object that the individual hardship is merely the consequence of the imperfection of human institutions, and that each one must take his chance of such hardships, in return for the general protection which he, as one member of the community, receives from the laws. This objection might be sustained, if it could be shewn that the State, through its tribunals, having made a gross mistake and done a gross injustice, is quite incapable of affording compensation. But it is perfectly plain, on the contrary, that the State possesses inherent powers for making, in all cases some, and in most cases adequate, compensation. In the first place, the perfect and public establishment of the accused man's innocence is a thing which he has a right to demand at the hands of the State, and which can always be obtained. If his trial and conviction have been public and solemn, and through the medium of courts of law, so should the inquiry into and adjudication of his innocence. The bad verdict ought to be judicially and publicly declared bad ab initio, and the sentence solemnly reversed; so that, instead of the pleasant and sarcastic fiction of obliterating a man's past life, in order to wash out a crime that never existed, and to create out of his ashes a new and innocent man, the effect of the proceeding might be to admit that the law had made a mistake, and to declare that the accused never was guilty. This, at least, could always be done in those cases where a free pardon is granted on the ground of proved innocence.

The next and equally material question is that of substantial compensation, and it can hardly be denied that it is the duty of the State to make that also. The condition on which every subject owes allegiance is, that he shall have protection; and how can it be said that a subject has protection, if he is liable to be sentenced to severe punishment by a mistake of the tribunals of his country, and denied compensation for the injury, when it is proved that such tribunals have condemned him under the influence of mistake? Again, the only plea for the punishment of criminals is, that, by reason of such punishment, others are deterred from committing crime, and the peaceable and innocent members of society are protected. But if an innocent man is punished, and the fact of his innocence being made known, he is in no manner compensated, so far from others being deterred from committing crime by reason of such a course of proceeding, the effect of it is to confound in the criminal mind of the country guilt and innocence, and thus to lay the foundation of a belief, that the criminal fares no worse than the innocent man before the law; an opinion by no means conducive to the protection of the peaceable. But the most conclusive argument to our mind is, that if injustice has been done, if injury has been inflicted, whether by an individual or by the State, the immutable laws of justice require that such injustice shall be atoned for, such injury met, by compensation.

Applying this doctrine to the question under consideration, if a man has been improperly condemned, taken from his worldly pursuits, deprived of those means by which, according to his station, he honestly earned his bread, it is the duty of the State that has, by the imperfection and mistake of its tribunals, condemned an innocent man, and injured his worldly status, to replace him by means of compensation as nearly as may be in the position in which he would have been if the injury had not been done. To say that this cannot be done is mere nonsense. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the injury practically done, apart from the question of restoration of credit, is a mere question of pecuniary damage, and could as easily be estimated as a question of damages in an action for slander, or for running against a carriage. To say that it could not be done because there is no fund out of which such compensation could be made, is merely to say, that there is at present no compensatory machinery at the disposal of Government. But it is obviously as easy to provide such a fund, as it is to provide a fund for the payment of any branch of the public service. Every duty of the State is a portion of the public service; and let it once be admitted, as it ought to be, that it is a duty of the State to compensate those whom, by the imperfections of its jurisprudence, it has injured; and it follows, that the machinery for compensation becomes a branch of the public service, and ought to be, and may easily be, provided accordingly.

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Law of Copyright in Books, Dramatic and Musical Compositions, Letters, and other Manuscripts, Engravings, and Sculpture, as enacted and administered in England and America, with some Notices of the History of Literary Property. By GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS, Counsellor at Law. pp. 450. [Maxwell, London; Little & Brown, Boston.]

This is almost the only importation from American legal literature for which the Profession has any reason to thank the enterprising publisher, who has done so much to circulate the works and to unmagnitude the reputation of the American jurists. Omne ignotum pro magnifico; and while the Storys, the Kent's, the Greenleafs, &c., were known only by the praises of their countrymen, English text writers ("compilers," as they have been contemptuously termed by the admirers of that prince of second-hand compilers, Story, the American Chitty) were content to hide their diminished heads, and to acknowledge that the science of English law might be best learned out of England. But, thanks to Mr. Maxwell, "the great American jurists" have been measured and weighed, and Lincoln's Inn is beginning to hold up its head, and to think it may still be a match for Harvard University.

The extensive literary intercourse that is carried on between the two countries renders the subject of copyright a fit one for an Anglo-American Treatise; and now that it is settled law that no copyright can exist in this country in any work that is first published abroad, it is important to know how the law stands in the different States of America, in order that authors and publishers may know what steps to take, if any can be taken with effect, for securing the copyright of new works in both countries. If the States had adopted the rule of the English law, this could have been done only by means of a strictly simultaneous publication in both countries. But we learn from Mr. Curtis, that, among the requisites to an American copyright, that of prior publication in the States is not included, although that of the author's citizenship or residence within the dominions of the United States at the time of publication is. The present law of copyright is the same throughout the States, and depends upon the act of Congress of 3rd February, 1831.

"As the law now stands there are but three requisites for securing a valid copyright. 1. The deposit of a printed copy of the title before publication with the clerk of the district court. 2. Notice to the public, by printing in the place designated [in the case of a book, the title page or the next page] the fact of the entry in the form prescribed by the statute. 3. The deposit with the clerk of a copy of the publication within three months from the date of publication" (p. 197).

But the 8th section of the act of Congress, above referred to, enacts, "that nothing in this act shall be construed to extend to prohibit the importation or vending, printing, or publishing of any map, chart, books, musical composition, print, or engraving, written, composed, or made by any person not being a citizen of the United States, nor [or] resident within the jurisdiction thereof." And the next section limits the protection of unpublished manuscripts in the same manner. In this provision the United States have shown themselves less liberal than the mother country. The consequence is, that an author residing in or being a citizen of the United States can secure his copyright in both countries, but no foreigner not residing in the United States can secure any copyright there.

The term of copyright in books, maps, charts, musical compositions, prints, and engravings, is, under the same act of Congress, twenty-eight years from the time recording the title, with a further term of fourteen years, if, at the expiration of the twenty-eight years, the author, inventor, designer, or engraver, or, in the case of a joint production, any one of the authors, &c. is living and a citizen of the United States or residing therein, or, being dead, shall have left a widow or child then living, provided such renewed copyright is duly registered within six months from the expiration of the first term. The benefit of the renewed term is given to the author, if living, and if not, to his widow and children; but the act, which is very loosely worded, has no provision allowing or restraining alienation of the contingent extended copyright while it remains contingent. It has been decided, however, that an assignment of "the copyright" does not carry the contingent term; and the question, whether the power of alienation exists, is thus satisfactorily disposed of by Mr. Curtis: "This contingent interest the author may undoubtedly assign. But, if the author is not living at the end of the first term, the additional term vests in his widow and child or children living at the time. It is not easy to see how the author can dispose of this interest. It is not created for him, but for his family, and it vests only in case of his death, and the policy of the statute, it seems to me, has removed it from his control." p. 236.

By a supplementary act of June 30, 1834, it is enacted, that all assignments of copyright not recorded, within sixty days after execution, in the office where the original copyright is recorded shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against subsequent purchasers without notice—a provision which might very advantageously be adopted in this country, where copyright and patent rights are the only species of property in dealing for which the purchaser has absolutely no protection but the honesty of the proprietor.

Mr. Curtis has performed his task with great care and ability, and to him the profession are indebted not only for a good, but for the only separate treatise on the subject, Mr. Godson's worthless book on patents and copyright, and the article on patents and copyright in Mr. Sweet's edition of Jarman's Conveyancing, being, we believe, the only publications* in which the subject has been treated in this country.

Almost the only fault of the book is its diffuseness. The author appears to be insensible to the beauties of brevity, and writes as if he were furnishing manuscript to the printer of the House of Commons. What a vision of eternal leisure must have been before him when he commenced his book with this sentence—"Before we enter upon the field of municipal jurisprudence, it may be well to pass through the more enlarged region of natural law"! Were there not the arguments in Miller v. Taylor, and Serjeant Talfourd's speeches, for those who delight to wander in the region of natural law? Have not the puerilities of Grotius and Puffendorf been sufficiently diluted and retailed by Blackstone?

We take from the chapter on piracy the following observations on the English cases respecting abridgments, as a specimen at once of our author's good sense and of his prolixity. Referring to the anonymous case Lofft, 775, on the abridgment of Hawkesworth's Voyages, in which Apsley, C., after conferring with Sir W. Blackstone held, that "an abridgment, where the understanding is employed in retrenching unnecessary and uninteresting circumstances which rather deaden the narrative, is not an act of plagiarism upon the original work, nor against any property of the author in it, but an allowable and meritorious work," Mr. Curtis says:—

"There can be no doubt that the definition of an abridgment, given in the anonymous case in Lofft, is correct in a critical sense. That the understanding must be employed in the act of 'carrying a larger work into a smaller compass, and rendering it less expensive and more convenient both to the time and use of the reader,' and that, when this is done, the person who does it exhibits, according to Lord Hardwicke, his own 'invention, learning, and judgment' is obvious. But whether this can be done with any work really original, and actually under the protection of copyright,—whether the property of the original author can be taken, and the taking justified, by any amount of learning, judgment, or invention shown in the act by him who thus appropriates the property of another,—is the great question which seems to be assumed, and not satisfactorily solved by these authorities. There are many modes in which the wrongful taker of another's property may exhibit vast talent and ingenuity, and even genius, both in the act of taking, and in the use which he makes of it; so that he may really be said to have incorporated with it both his own labour and his own intellectual energy; but the question of original title is still apt inconveniently to recur in such cases. In like manner, invention, learning, and judgment are often shewn in the appropriation of the literary labours of others; but the Courts have not hesitated on this account to ascertain what part of a book, labouring under suspicion, was taken from the complainant; and, if the title of the latter is made out, to grant redress, even to the destruction of all that the piratical author can call his own. In the case of a colourable curtailment of the original work, there may be the exercise of a mental operation, as well as in a professed abridgment; and if the original author is injured by the latter as well as by the former, it seems to be a very unsatisfactory answer, in either case, to say, that his book has been made, by a mental operation, to wear the appearance of a new work. In both cases, the true inquiry is, has anything been taken which belongs to another? In either case the form under which the original matter re-appears should be treated as a disguise; and the extent of the transformation shews only the extent to which the disguise has been carried, as long as anything remains which the original author can shew to be justly and exclusively his own.

"It is necessary, therefore, in this inquiry, to look, not to the origin of the right of literary property, for the right is to be assumed, but to what the right includes. When the author of a book, of whatever kind, possessing the legal attributes of originality, has secured his copyright according to the prevailing law of his country, he has secured the exclusive right to print and publish his own book. In the jurisprudence with which we are concerned, this right includes the whole book and every part of it; for we have seen, that there may be a piratical taking of extracts and passages, and that the quantity thus taken may be immaterial. It includes, also, or may include, the style, or language, and expression; the learning, the facts, or the narrative; the sentiment and ideas, as far as their identity can be traced; and the form, arrangement, and combination which the author has given to his materials. These are, or may be, all distinct objects of the right of property; and in every work of originality likely to be abridged, or capable of being abridged, they are all important objects of that right. However imperfectly the subject may have been regarded in former times, it is now, I think, to be regarded as settled, that whatever is metaphysically part or parcel of the intellectual contents of a book, if in a just sense original, is protected and included under the right of property vested by law in the author; and it is very material to observe, that the arrangement, the method, the plan, the course of reasoning, or course of narrative, the exhibition of the subject, or the learning of the book, may be, according to its character, as much objects of the right of property as the language and the ideas.

"What, then, does the maker of an abridgment print, publish, and sell, after he has made it? He has been employed according to the definition above quoted, 'in retrenching unnecessary and uninteresting circumstances, which rather deaden the narration; that is to say, he has rejected what, in his judgment, are redundancies. Does this make him the author or proprietor of what remains? If the work be a history, did he, the person abridging it, compile the materials into their present shape, and describe the course of events, and embody the whole of what constitutes the intellectual contents of the book, or are these things the product of another's labour, research, and faculty of writing? If it be a fictitious narrative, whose genius created the characters, and animated them with the sentiments which they utter, and invented the pleasing incidents of their mock existences, and wove the whole into the novel or the poem; which exists as an intellectual whole, after as well as before the process by which 'the unnecessary and uninteresting circumstances' are 'retrenched?' Or if it be a work of science, or a treatise on any branch of knowledge, whose are the ideas, the course of reasoning and illustration, the plan and analysis of the subject, and the collection and arrangement of materials which constitute the identity of the book? These questions can have but one answer, and if the abridgment in any given case consists solely in the reduction of the bulk of the volume, by the rejection of redundancies, it is a mere republication of a connected series of extracts, in a different juxta-position from the original author's, to which the party had no title whatever. On the other hand, if the abridgment not only rejects redundancies, but also clothes the sentiments and ideas which may be left, in different phraseology, then it falls under the predicament of a colourable alteration, which cannot escape the censure of justice.

"In short, the publication of a mere and professed abridgment, is an invasion of the rights of an author in several ways. It pledges and compromises his reputation and responsibility, to the same extent as the republication of the original work. It makes use of his work to raise a competition which must always be dangerous, by bringing it in a contracted form within the reach of a larger number of purchasers; and it creates a direct obstacle to the exercise of his right of giving the work to the public himself under the form of an abridgment." [After four pages more, not devoid of meaning, the author proceeds:—]

"I cannot but think, therefore, that the result to which English and American jurisprudence ought to come, upon this question, is, that an abridgment, in which the text, the plan, the ideas, arguments, narrative, and discussion of an original author are reproduced, in a condensed form, is a violation of his right of property.

"This position seems to be sustained by the doctrine of a recent decision in England; although some of the remarks which fell from the Court apparently recognise the right of making an abridgment of some kind, in the case of a book, as distinguishable from an abridgment or adaptation of music. When examined, however, the reasoning of Lord Lyndhurst on this point, taken in connection with the point decided in the cause, will be found to give a different view of the general doctrine of abridgments from that which has loosely prevailed in England for above a century."

Upon similar reasoning Mr. Curtis arrives at the conclusion, that the publication of a translation of a work would be a piracy in the country where copyright of the original subsisted.

We cannot leave the book without complaining, that though it has a good index, there is no table of contents or other key to the plan and arrangement of the work. In the appendix of statutes, the original International Copyright Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 59) is reprinted, but the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, by which that act was repealed, is not noticed either there or in the body of the work.

We are glad to see that Mr. Curtis promises a Treatise on the Law of Patents. Mr. Hindmarsh's work is very good, and quite sufficient for English law, but the American patent law is interesting in this country. We do hope that he will condense his style.

Some Remarks on the Law of Copyright. Pp. 15.

A pamphlet, bearing the above title, but without name of author, printer, publisher, or place, reached us after the above notice of Mr. Curtis's work was written. The writer (probably one of "the trade") refers to the judgment in D'Almeida v. Boosey, which, he says, "clearly negated the claims on behalf of foreigners under most circumstances, and cast so much doubt on them under all others, that it was thought no more would be heard of foreign copyright, except under the provisions of the International Copyright Act;" and complains, that "An un-English class of speculators in foreign compositions have thought they could ride over that portion of the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, which had determined that publications first made abroad could not be brought within the protection of the English Copyright Acts, by causing simultaneous publication in two or more countries; and in this attempt to evade the spirit of the law and the former decisions of the Courts, the Court of Common Pleas has concurred, by a judgment delivered May 12th, 1848, in the case of Cocks v. Purday."

After citing the judgment in D'Almeida v. Boosey (1 You. & C., Exch., 298), the writer proceeds:—

"With this judgment before them, the tactics of the speculators in foreign music became directed to the means of evading that part of the judgment which annihilated copyright here in case of first publication elsewhere; and, as none of the foreign Legislatures recognise copyright in their respective countries, except upon the condition of first publication therein, and as the price to be obtained in this country would not pay for losing the foreign market, the expedient adopted was that of simultaneous publication in the various states in which it was desired to maintain the copyright. A very cursory reading of the cases will, however, show that first publication is as much the basis of copyright in England as in any other country; and how simultaneous and first publication can co-exist is a paradox to grammarians, however lawyers may reconcile it to their minds."

This, as we have shewn in the preceding article, is a mistake; first publication in the British dominions is not essential to a British copyright. Mr. Serjeant Talfourd's opinion to the contrary, (cited at p. 11, as "closing" the question), cannot be sustained, and has been overruled. In America prior publication is not essential, as we have seen, though the citizenship or residence of the author is; and, we believe, the law is the same in France and in many other continental countries resembles that of America in these particulars. The injustice to British literature which results from this state of things, is very fairly pointed out in the Remarks:—

"All that has hitherto been written is based on the assumption, for the time, that a foreigner can have copyright, although not a resident in the kingdom, or rather that he can assign to a resident. This proposition may, however, be met at once by saying that, if foreigners have such a right, or any right, except under the provisions of the International Copyright Act, (7 Vict. c. 12), the passing of that act was an absurdity, for it can only have the effect of imposing terms on those who already possessed the privilege of copyright unconditionally. But, in truth, whatever doubt may have formerly existed, and may have led to the decisions favouring assignments to Englishmen, although made by foreigners, seems to have been completely removed by the passing of the International Copyright Act, the provisions of which must become a dead letter, if foreigners are to enjoy and convey copyright in England in any other ways than those prescribed by that act.

"Equally is there an end to all necessity for conventions under the International Copyright Act, because, if foreigners, by simply multiplying plates, and causing them to be published simultaneously in all the great cities of the universe, can thereby in each of them secure a copyright, it would be quite absurd to expect that their respective Governments will give to Englishmen that reciprocity which the 14th section of the International Copyright Act declares shall be the condition of any order in council having for its object the granting of copyright in England to foreigners. And it is right here emphatically to observe, on the fact—that while, (if the decision of the Common Pleas be good law), any foreigner may have an unconditional copyright in England, there is no process known by which an Englishman, resident in England, can get a copyright in any foreign nation in the world.

"English literature, to judge from the lists of Galigani, Xavier, Baudry, and others, appears to have no protection in France. Yet the International Copyright Act requires reciprocity. The Frenchman living in Paris, it seems, may sell his copyright in London: can our Balfe, or Bishop, or Wallace, &c., sell their copyrights in Paris? If they go and reside there, absolutely composing and producing their works there, they may; but not otherwise.

"If, as laid down by the Common Pleas, a foreigner can get copyright in England without express enactment, how was it that the Legislature, at the time of the Union with Ireland, re-enacted the then Copyright Acts expressly to bring Irish literature within their protection? Irishmen, it need scarcely be remarked, were not foreigners—they were the subjects of the English Crown even before the Union—yet they could not have the benefit of English legislation unless expressly mentioned. This is corroborated by the fact that all the writings of Thomas Moore published in Ireland before the Union are treated to this day as non-copyright in England." The treatment of Thomas Moore's or Thomas Little's early productions as public property, by the trade, is rather slender proof of the law. The fact is, that there is no copyright in some of that writer's productions, because the wisdom of certain Lords Chancellors has determined that there ought to be free trade in immoral publications,—that vicious books, like women of easy virtue, ought to be on the town. Some others of that gentleman's copyrights have been lost by a very curious accident. (See Power v. Walker, 4 Camp. 8; Moore v. Walker, Id. 9, n.).

"But, say the counsel for the traders in foreign music, it is not the foreigner, but the English assignee, that the law is to protect. This is a distinction without a difference; for the whole purport of the acts in protecting assignees is to enable them properly to compensate the authors.

"No assignee, in law, can have larger powers than the principal from whom he derives his power. If the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, in Cocks v. Purday is sound, Cocks, as the assignee of Labitski, can restrain the publication of Labitski's compositions—Labitski being now, as always, resident abroad.

'Had Labitski not assigned at all, could he, residing abroad, have brought similar actions to Cocks v. Purday? and, if he could not, how can his assignee?"

There can be no doubt, that the decision in Cocks v. Purday, which is here impugned, is good law, (though we believe the Court of Queen's Bench have reserved their opinion on the same point), and as little that that law is bad policy. The fact is, that the Copyright Acts, from the first to last, are among the worst contrived and worst drawn acts on the statute book, and a careful revision and consolidation of the law is much wanted,—especially with a view to international copyright, and the registry of assignments of copyright.

TAYLOR'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Just published, in 3 vols., royal 8vo., price 2l. 10s. boards, A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE, as ADMINISTERED IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND, with Illustrations from the Laws of America and other Foreign States. By JOHN PITT TAYLOR, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"A writer who undertakes, even with the aid of Dr. Greenleaf, to produce a more readable work than Mr. Phillimore's, or a more scientific work than Mr. Starkie's, as originally written, or a more useful book of reference for the mere practitioner than Mr. Roscoe's, as edited by Mr. Smirke, undertakes no trifling matter. But Mr. Taylor appears to have formed no undue estimate of his own powers; and although it is not much our custom to go into practical details, we will rapidly indicate the parts, which, independently of his general merits, fully entitle him, in our opinion, to the credit of having made a highly useful contribution to our practical legal literature."—Law Review, May, 1848.

"We heartily congratulate Mr. Taylor on the result of his labours, as they are highly creditable to himself, evincing the mastery of a very difficult branch of law, and calculated to afford valuable assistance to all branches of the profession."—Legal Observer, May, 1848.

"None who are preparing for the office of an advocate should omit to make Mr. Taylor's work a portion of his course of reading. During the five years that we have been keeping this record of the progress of legal literature, our attention has been directed to no more valuable contribution to it than that now before us."—Law Times.

BROOM'S LEGAL MAXIMS: a Selection of Legal Maxims, classified and illustrated, with references to the Civil Law and the American Reports. By HERBERT BROOM, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

"This is not merely a new edition, but rather a new work built on the groundwork of the last. It is a real work. A goodly fruit of rich soil and careful culture. It is a compendium of law, combining the very marrow of its principles and precepts, from which all extraneous and barren offshoots are cut off; comprising all the cases, old and new, that can illustrate, and none that can encumber principles. It is among the few law books that we bind and place permanently for constant use on the handiest shelf of our bookcase."—Law Magazine, May, 1848.

"Mr. Platt has presented the profession with a full and complete treatise of the whole law and practice relating to leases, accompanied by an ample collection of precedents, and we are glad that the work has fallen into such competent hands, equally in regard to practical experience and professional learning."—Legal Observer.

"The Propositions of Law are clear and precise, well arranged, and supported by full statements of the Cases and Authorities upon which they are founded. The Appendix of Precedents is excellent. There are Leases and Parts of Leases, Clauses, and Powers of Leasing, which seem to supply all the precedent and form which the most varied practice can require."—Daily News.

"This book consists of two large volumes, and is amply entitled to rank as a standard work on the useful and important subject of which it treats."—Law Magazine.

LONDON, JUNE 24, 1848.

THE utility of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 96, (the Trustee's Relief Act), has been proved by the number of applications already made, and the necessity of general rules for regulating the practice under it. The act itself is expressed in very general language, and left, therefore, much to the discretion of the Court in respect of the mode of proceeding in applying its provisions; and, accordingly, there has been difficulty and diversity of opinion upon several points. It was early doubted, whether the Court has jurisdiction under this act to decide upon a contested construction of an instrument creating a trust; and it was also early determined, that it has such jurisdiction. But that the Court is not bound to exercise the jurisdiction is clearly expressed by the 2nd section of the act itself, under the reservation of power to the Court to direct the institution of a suit, if it shall appear that any trust funds cannot safely without be distributed. In practice, a doubt has arisen as to the parties who should be served with a petition under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 96. It was decided by the Vice-Chancellor of England and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, as correctly observed by the learned editor of a volume of equity precedents recently published*, that the trustees need not be served on an application by cestuis que trustent. But in another branch of the court an opposite rule has prevailed. This point is now settled by the 5th of the General Orders of the 10th June, 1848, (see ante, p. 241), directing, that the trustee shall be served on any application respecting the fund. The General Orders, it will be seen, require a very specific affidavit to be filed in support of the application by the trustee to the Accountant-General, to receive the trust fund; and the Accountant-General will not be bound to accept the fund without the production of an office copy of such affidavit. The trustee must also, after having made the deposit, forthwith give notice to the persons interested in the fund, or, at least, such of them as he has included in his affidavit. It does not appear what would be the consequence of neglect to give such notice on any application by a cestuis que trust: it may be presumed, however, that if he were put to any expense by such neglect, the trustee would have to pay it. On any application by the trustee, who is, by the 6th Order, bound to give notice to the parties interested in, or entitled to, the fund, probably, if he had duly given notice of his deposit pursuant to the 3rd Order, the Court would assume, in the absence of any suggestion to the contrary, that if all the persons named in the trustee's original affidavit are served, all necessary parties are before the Court, and would hear the petition. But if the trustee has neglected to give notice under the 3rd Order, it may be that the Court will, on any petition presented by him, require further information as to who are the cestuis que trustent, and make the trustee pay the costs of the necessary inquiries. Although, therefore, it is not very easy to see what is the precise use of the trustee giving notice to the cestuis que trustent of his deposit, no trustee can be advised to neglect compliance with the order.

The act, it will be observed, merely requires the trustee, in the affidavit that he files in support of his application to deposit the trust fund, to describe the instrument creating the trust. The fourth title of the first General Order of the 10th June requires him to describe shortly the nature of the trust, as well as of the instrument. This may be in many instances a difficult matter to state shortly. However, trustees will do well to bear in mind, that, if they do not do it shortly, they may possibly not be allowed their costs, or so much at least as they have, by want of strict regard to the order, incurred. It is apprehended, also, that, under the fifth head of the first General Order, the trustee will be bound to make all reasonable inquiries as to who are the parties beneficially entitled, and will not be justified in furnishing meagre information, merely because he has by carelessness omitted to acquire such information as he might have acquired.

* Whitworth's Equity Precedents, 1848, p. 567.

On the whole, it is plain that the General Orders of the 10th June are intended to make it, and will make it, a matter much less of course than it was, for a trustee to throw a fund into the Accountant-General's office merely to relieve himself, leaving the cestuis que trustent to find out what has become of their trust fund, and how to proceed to obtain administration of it. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 96, will probably now become what it was intended to be, a great boon to trustees, but at the same time not a mere inducement to them to throw off the duties they have deliberately undertaken.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—Robert Crossland, of Parson's-lane, Bury, Lancashire; Henry H. man, of Spring-bank-villa, near Bewdley, Worcester-shire; William Radcliffe, of Liverpool; Thomas Copman, of Aylsham, Norfolk; John Williams Bell, of Gillingham, Dorsetshire.

EQUITY PRACTICE.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN.

The Humble Memorial of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association,

Shews,—That the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association is a Society entirely composed of attorneys and solicitors in England and Wales, (now consisting of more than 900 members), and that the objects for which it was formed are—the promotion of the interests of the suitors and the better and more economical administration of justice,—the removal of the many and serious grievances to solicitors and through them to the suitors,—and for maintaining the rights and increasing the usefulness of the Profession.

That the Members of this Society, and they believe the whole Profession of the Law, feel that the present system of proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and the mode of conducting business in its offices, is injurious to the suitors and the community; and they would earnestly impress on your Lordship the necessity of making extensive improvements therein, and beg respectfully to suggest some alterations and amendments which they are convinced could be readily accomplished and would prove highly beneficial.

That in the year 1840 a petition was presented to the Honourable the House of Commons by a large number of the Members of the Profession, from which the following are extracts:—

“That the delay and expense at present attendant on proceedings in the Chancery Court are so great as effectually to close its doors against all, except the richer classes of the community.

“That the expense (which arises principally from the delay) is so serious as to render it imperative on the Profession to prevent as far as possible the institution of suits for amounts much under 1000*l*.

“That, therefore, while at Common Law, rights of small amount can without impropriety be submitted to legal decision, a very large and important section of the community (viz. persons interested in trust property of amounts under 1000*l*.) are left without the protection of the Law; and for them there is absolutely no Equity Court in operation.

“That owing to this defect of our Judicial Institutions, not only is individual wrong inflicted without redress on this class of society, but frauds as to trust property, offences against the most confidential relations, are actually encouraged by Law, because permitted to pass with entire impunity.

“That the Court of Chancery presents the single instance in the history of the country of a great national Establishment, altogether stationary as to the number of those coming within its operation, the Suitors of the Court having been as numerous 100 years ago as they are now; and that the defects of the Courts have, as your Petitioners believe, become fixed, from the entire insufficiency of the Institution to meet the wants of the people.

“That your Petitioners are convinced that no effective improvements can be introduced into the Equity Courts, unless the duty be assigned to the Judges of superintending, controlling, and regulating the functions of the Court and of its Offices, and that to impose such duties with effect it is essential that there should be given to the Judges powers commensurate with them.

“That your Petitioners, therefore, appreciate as of the highest value the provision introduced into the Bill now before your Honourable House, giving powers for these purposes to the Judges of the Court.

“That as regulations of this kind require to be made with great deliberation, and of necessity must from time to time be amended, your Petitioners would humbly submit whether these powers should not be permanent instead of being granted only for a short period of years.

“That your Petitioners humbly hope, that, in the representations which they have made of the importance of rendering the proceedings in Equity more expeditious and cheap, it will be felt by your Honourable House that they are advocating improvements of the greatest importance to the interests of the suitors and of the community; whilst at the same time your Petitioners freely admit that they believe these improvements will also in the end be advantageous to their own body, from the conviction that the interests of the solicitor is in all these questions identified with that of his client.”

That the bill referred to was passed, as your Memorialists believe, in some degree in consequence of the facts stated in the said Petition; and that though its operation was confined to five years, it has since been made perpetual, and that the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors, or any two of them, has now absolute power over both the practice and offices of the Court; and as your Memorialists would most humbly and respectfully suggest, the Lord Chancellor has also thrown upon him a co-extensive responsibility of seeing that all proper and necessary improvements and alterations are made.

That though several useful Amendments have been made under the said Acts, yet that compared with the extent of the evil, they have been unimportant; and that your Memorialists regret to say that the allegations of the Petition alluded to are almost equally as true now as they were when the Petition was presented.

That there are a great variety of matters which the experience of your Memorialists as Practitioners would propose for amendment; and that your Memorialists would beg to suggest the heads of some of such matters, not presuming to enter into full details unless your Lordship should desire it.

That in these suggestions, and all Amendments in points of practice, your Memorialists would wish to take as a rule the plan of opening new methods of procedure without abolishing the old, further than may be found to be essentially necessary; such new methods to be by way of alternative, and not by way of substitution, thus leaving it to experience to determine the comparative value of each method. They would also respectfully suggest, that the practice of the Common Law Courts in many instances might be usefully introduced into the Court of Chancery. (For instance, the present process of enforcing Equity Orders requiring so many repetitions of personal notice, frequently renders the process nugatory).

That there is a great number of other matters which your Memorialists could submit for the improvement of the procedure of the Court, but that your Memorialists would beg in the first instance particularly to suggest the following amendments, believing them all to be of considerable value:—

I. With regard to Practice.

1. That when all parties consent, the Courts of Equity should be at liberty to exercise a jurisdiction on Petition in all cases whatsoever, so as to supersede the necessity of Bill, Answer, and Evidence on Interrogatory. [Your Lordship's Act of last Session, allowing Trustees to pay money into Court, and then creating a jurisdiction on Petition, has established the plan here proposed in those cases wherein the trustee hopes by partial submission to screen a breach of trust, and in which, therefore, its application was probably most questionable.]

2. That the practice of allowing special cases for the opinion of the Court, as established by Courts of Law by the stats. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 25, should be extended to Courts of Equity, in which Courts it is as much, if not more, needed.

3. As a consequence that the practice of the Courts compelling in all cases inquiries for parties or taking accounts, should be greatly modified.

4. That a primary jurisdiction should be given to the Master in all cases of equitable account in which the accounting parties consent to submit to such jurisdiction; and that such jurisdiction should be either absolute (except subject to an appeal) or a jurisdiction to entertain the matter without order of reference, but subject to confirmation and further direction by the Court.

4. The same principle may be usefully applied to all that class of cases in which a reference to the Master is almost of course, such as compromising suits; arrangements when the parties interested therein are not sui juris; proposals for marriage of wards, and for sales by private contract, power for parties to bid.

[The latter practice first applied to the letting, setting, and managing by receivers, and lately introduced into Lunacy, and extended there, has been of great benefit.]

5. Also primary jurisdiction for the appointment of new trustees where there is no power of new appointment in the instrument creating the trust or none capable of being exercised.

6. Also primary jurisdiction to approve maintenance and Guardian for Infants.

7. Also to grant stop orders on funds in Court; and to make such other orders as may be expedient in cases where parties consent.

8. To take the consent of married women to payments out of Court to their husbands.

[With regard to consent where married women or infants are interested, the Masters are, by the present scheme of the Court, peculiarly the parties to protect them; and your Memorialists would propose, that all consents for married women and children should be binding if the Master by his signature should sanction such consents.]

II. With regard to the Despatch of Business in the Offices.

1. To establish a thorough system of supervision of the Offices so as to detect delays and negligence there, and to supply to the Officer the present want of all motive to exertion; and to secure that there shall be a sufficient staff in every department for the due discharge of the official business.

2. To require all official documents to shew on the face of them the date they were bespoken, and when delivered out.

III. With regard to the Mode of transacting Official Business.

1. To consolidate the Record, Affidavit, Subpœna, and Report Offices, and provide that all Documents now filed in the Examiner's and Register's Office be filed there; and to alter the practice as to filing Records, Pleadings, Examinations, and Affidavits, so as to establish one Record Office for the Court in which the Bill, Answer, and all the other proceedings in one cause, (not the Bill and Answer only as at present), including Affidavits and other Evidence, Petitions, Orders, Reports, and all other Official Documents, may be filed chronologically in a separate and distinct form, or bound in a separate and distinct volume, and be so indexed by the name of the Testator as well as by Plaintiffs' and Defendants' names, that public reference may be easily had thereto.

2. To require publication of Accounts at Accountant-General's, similar to the unclaimed dividend account which Parliament has required from the Bank of England.

3. To dispense with useless forms in the Orders of the Court, and particularly with all Orders of course, (which in your Memorialists' view, are not only indefensible, but absurd), and also with all the ordinary directions repeated in all Money Orders,—in all Orders appointing Receivers,—in Decrees directing usual Accounts of Testators' Estates,—for reserved Biddings, and on Sales, and to curtail the introductory part of Orders on Petition and Motion, and on Further Directions.

4. To dispense also with a very great variety of other needless and expensive forms, at least when parties consent, such as production of Original Wills in Court, setting down Causes, confirmation of Reports, double or even treble Petitions to get out of Court Married Women's Monies, Subpœnas to hear Judgment, Bills of Revivor and common Supplemental Bills, (where at Law Suggestions on Roll answer the same object), &c.

IV. In the Subordinate Judicial Department.

1. To authorise and direct the Masters to act for or another in case of illness or occasional absence.

2. As to the Taxing Masters, to apply the General Orders, 76th, of April, 1828, and 76th, of November, 1831, as to taxation, in case the parties differ, (which Order has practically been a dead letter, because the Courts or Registrar have not acted on it), to all cases of Costs ordered to be paid by one party to another, and to require the Taxing Master in Equity to tax as the Common-law Masters do, without any Order of Reference, where both parties consent, (extending the principle of 124th Order of May, 1845).

V. As to the Banking Department of the Court.

1. To require (as was done under the Slave Compensation Act, and is done in Ireland) the Accountant-General to invest and accumulate dividends from time to time, when once ordered, (without application by the parties from half-year to half-year).

2. To dispense, as is done by Accountant-General in Bankruptcy, with Powers of Attorney, (which are only necessary to pass Legal Estates, and to require him to act on letters or such other authority as may be sufficient in law to bar the party, the solicitor of the party verifying such authority.

[According to the present practice, there is no evidence given to the Accountant-General that the party signing the power is the party entitled to receive the money under the Order.]

3. To allow money to be paid into Court (as the Courts of Law do) without any Order, and also to be invested, as is now done with money paid in under the Legacy Act.

4. To have the orders on which Accountant-General acts, or an office copy of them filed with him.

5. To remove the great hardship on parties arising from Canterbury Probates and Administrations, being always required for the Accountant-General.

6. To get a Branch of the Bank of England established in Chancery-lane for the convenience of the Suitors, in the same way as has been done at the Court of Bankruptcy.

VI. As to Evidence.

1. To enact the Common-law Rules as to admission of documents.

[Rules to this effect were prepared many years ago by Members of your Memorialists' body, and submitted to, and are still in the hands of the Judges.]

2. To enact Rules to make the giving of evidence compulsory in Bankruptcy and other cases where proceedings are on Petition, by allowing Exhibition of Interrogatories or vivâ voce examination.

3. To extend the appointment of Masters Extraordinary to London, and to reduce the fee on the appointment of a Master Extraordinary.

4. To allow Affidavits to be used on the hearing of causes; at least, subject to the discretion of the judge.

And your Memorialists would further respectfully state, that the body of Solicitors are anxious to give every assistance in their power to your Lordship and the other Judges in improving the Court of Chancery.

It was formerly the practice of the Judges of the Court to consult the six Clerks and Clerks in Court as the solicitors and representatives of the Suitors of the Court, on all changes in practice; and your Memorialists would, lastly, very respectfully submit to your Lordship, on behalf of the Suitors of the Court, that it is now, since the abolition of that Office, due to the Suitor, that the Solicitors of your Lordship's Court, as the Members, and the only Members of the Profession personally known to, and the parties personally selected by the Suitors of the Court, and the only parties personally intrusted by them as their confidential agents, should in future be consulted on such changes.

Your Memorialists pray, that, if the duties of your Lordship will permit, you will be pleased to investigate the matters of this Memorial, and will receive a Deputation of your Memorialists thereon; or that you will appoint other parties to investigate the same, and report thereon to your Lordship, and if your Lordship shall see fitting, that your Lordship will entrust them to carry out the objects of this Memorial so far as the same shall appear wise and desirable.

LONDON, JULY 1, 1848.

DURING the present week the Court of Common Pleas has contributed the weight of its judgment to the former decisions of the Queen's Bench and the Exchequer, upon the effect of a promissory note payable to the maker's own order. The Judges of the Common Pleas adopt the view of the subject which had been taken by the Judges of the Exchequer, and declare their opinion to be, that a note made in such a form is not a promissory-note, and that per se and before indorsement it is altogether invalid.

In a former article (11 Jur. 265) we offered some comments on this question, but it will tend more clearly to exhibit the character and effect of this latest decision, if we briefly re-state what may be denominated by the popular term "its antecedents."

In Flight v. Maclean, (16 Mee. & W. 51), the first count of the declaration was on a promissory-note made by the defendant payable to his own order, and indorsed by him to the plaintiff. It was held bad on special demurrer, on the ground that it was not within the statute of Anne, which requires the note to be made payable by the party making it to some other person.

In Wood v. Mytton, (11 Jur. 967), the question upon a similar declaration came before the Court of Queen's Bench on a motion in arrest of judgment, and they then held, that the indorsee of such a note came within the last clause of sect. 1 of 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9, whereby any person to whom such note "that is payable to any person or persons, his or their order," is indorsed, may sue the maker or indorser, as in the case of bills of exchange. In the course of the argument Lord Denman asked, "Admitting that it is no contract at first, does not the indorsement create a promise to pay the indorsee?" and, in delivering judgment, his Lordship said, "The Legislature appears to have intended to give to all promissory notes the validity of bills of exchange, and no reason has been assigned why any promissory note containing a promise to pay should be invalid, so as to enable the maker to commit a fraud." It will be seen by these expressions that the Court did rely much upon the fact of the indorsement, as giving validity to the note, although they put other grounds more prominently forward as the basis of their judgment. Of course the question could arise in an action only after indorsement, as such a note could not be negotiated by any other means. The same Court, in Absolon v. Marks, (17 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 7), acted upon their former decision.

The cases in the Common Pleas, to which we referred at the commencement of this article, (Brown v. De Winter and Gray v. Lardner), appear to reconcile the former decisions, (although not the grounds of them), and to lay down this intelligible rule: that an instrument, whereby the maker promises to pay money to his own order, is not a promissory note, but that by indorsement (whether special or in blank) it becomes a promise to pay the money to bearer, and must be taken to be valid as against the party paying it away, that it should be declared upon as a promissory note payable to bearer; but that if it be declared upon as a promissory note payable to the maker's own order and indorsed to the plaintiff, it is good on general demurrer or on motion in arrest of judgment, (as was held in Wood v. Mytton), although it would be bad on special demurrer, (as was held in Flight v. Maclean). The Court were of opinion, that, although no specific form of words is required in the making of a promissory note, yet that it must contain the essentials of a contract: that, primâ facie, a promissory note imported an instrument, whereby one person promised to pay money to another; that, therefore, the act of Parliament was to be considered as referring to a payee other than the maker, and that such payee should appear, at all events, by implication.

Of course, it is of the essence, and within the very definition of an obligation, that two or more persons should be parties thereto. In the words of Pothier, "Le contrat est une convention par laquelle une ou plusieurs personnes s'obligent envers une ou plusieurs autres à donner, à faire, ou à ne pas faire, quelque chose." (On Obl., part 1, c. 1).

PRACTICAL EFFECTS OF SEVERAL COUNTS AND PLEAS.

Many important consequences flow from the adoption of more than one count or one plea which are not always sufficiently considered in the pleader's chambers, but which often impede and injure the parties at a subsequent stage of the cause. The subject may be conveniently discussed according to the following arrangement:

I. The Effect before or without Trial of using several Counts.

1. As regards the Plea.

Set-off.—To a declaration containing several counts, it has been held, that a plea of set-off of a smaller sum need not specify to which particular count or part of a count it is to be applied. (Noel v. Davis, 4 Mee. & W. 136). But in such case the plea is not divisible, and the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict unless the defendant prove a set-off equalling the whole of the plaintiff's aggregate demand. Where, therefore, to a declaration for goods sold, money paid, and on an account stated, the defendant pleaded non-assumpsit and a set-off, and the cause having been referred, the arbitrator ordered a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff on both issues, except as to the count for money paid, and so far as the issues applied to that count, for the defendant on both, it was decided that the award was bad. (Moore v. Butkin, 7 Adol. & Ell. 595). Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the Court said, "The defendant, by that plea (set-off), admits something to be due on each count of the declaration, and undertakes to prove a cross demand exceeding the aggregate amount of the sums so due. The issue under nil debet is not, whether any sum is due from the plaintiff, but whether a sum is due from him exceeding or equalling the aggregate amount of his demands. Unless such a sum is due the plea would be no bar to the action, although the evidence might reduce the damages."

Payment into Court.—Although money paid into court on a special count admits the contract declared upon and the breach, yet if it be paid in to indebitatus counts, it only amounts to an admission of liability upon some contracts to the extent of the sum paid in, but not of the contracts declared upon; and, therefore, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to identify the sum paid in with some contract of the nature of that declared upon. To a declaration containing indebitatus counts for rent and fixtures, 12*l.* was paid into court and a set-off was pleaded to the residue: the particulars claimed 8*l.* 10*s.* for rent, and 47*l.* for fixtures. At the trial the occupation was proved; but there was no evidence of any contract as to the fixtures: the defendant proved his set-off to the amount of 24*l.*, and a verdict having been entered for him was upheld by the Court, on the ground that the payment into court did not admit a contract with regard to the fixtures. (Hingham v. Robins, 7 Dowl. 352; 5 Mee. & W. 94, S. C.; and see Edelson v. Nowell, 6 Mee. & W. 9). On this point, however, it does not make any difference, whether the declaration contain one or several counts, except that the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages on each. (See Lush's Prac. p. 741). Where plaintiff declared for work done and upon an account stated, and money was paid in on the latter count only, he was held not to be entitled to a verdict upon proof of work done, but that he should have shewn that the two counts were not for the same claim. (Churchhill v. Day, 3 M. & R. 71).

Right of Way.—A declaration in trespass contained two counts, one for a trespass in a close, and the other for a trespass in "other parts" of the close. The plea justified both trespasses under one right of way over the close, and the replication took issue upon this. The plea was held an answer to the trespasses in both counts. (Wood v. Wedgwood, 1 C. B. 273). It was, in fact, the same as if the plaintiff had alleged in one count that the trespasses were committed on divers days in various parts of the close.

2. As regards the Replication or new Assignment.

Where plaintiff demurs to pleas to one count of a declaration, and takes issue on those pleaded to other counts, and obtains judgment on the demurrer, he will not be allowed to withdraw his replications on the ground that the pleas replied to are open to the same objection that prevailed against the pleas demurred to, but he will be permitted to withdraw the counts on which the issues in fact have arisen. (Delegat v. Highley, 6 Dowl. 194).

Although an entire replication which is bad in part is bad for the whole, yet, where the declaration contains several separable subjects of complaint, to which defendant pleads a joint justification, and the replication is divided into parts addressed respectively to the several subjects, each of such parts may be taken as a separate replication; and one part of the replication, therefore, in such case, may be good, notwithstanding another part is bad. (Vivian v. Jenkins, 4 Adol. & Ell. 741; see also Monkman v. Shepherdson, 11 Adol. & Ell. 411; 1 Wms. Saund. 28 a., n. (2)).

In Bul. N. P., p. 17, it is said, "The common way is for the plaintiff to have two or three counts in his declaration, so that the defendant is under a necessity of pleading the general issue to some of them, (for if he justify two he admits two, and, consequently, unless he can prove two justifications, must have a verdict against him); he may prove another battery without being put to make a novel assignment." But it was observed by Buller, J., in Smith v. Miles, (1 T. R. 479), "The second count does not, in all cases, avoid the necessity of a new assignment."

OBSERVATIONS ON THE FORM OF DEMURRERS IN EQUITY.

It is a well-known rule on demurrer in equity, that the demurrer must rely only on the facts alleged by the bill, otherwise it will be a speaking demurrer, and will be overruled. But it is not always easy to say, with precision, what is a speaking demurrer. When the demurrer introduces, by distinct averment, a fact not stated by the bill, and which fact is necessary to support the demurrer, the demurrer is clearly speaking. The leading, in fact we believe the only, case of this nature is Edsell v. Buchanan (4 Bro. C. C. 254). In that case the bill was by a mortgagor for redemption. It stated the mortgage in 1756, and the possession of Thomas Edsell, as mortgagor, till his death in 1770, and that the equity of redemption thereupon became vested in plaintiff; and soon after the death of Thomas Edsell, defendant took possession, and had remained in possession ever since &c. The defendant demurred, shewing for cause, that, upon the face of the bill, it appeared that from the year 1770, which is upwards of twenty years before the filing of the bill, defendant had been in possession, and, therefore, the right of redemption was gone. The Lord Chancellor said he could not infer from the language of the bill—which was that the defendant took possession soon after 1770—that he took possession in 1770; so that it did not appear upon the face of the bill, but by the averment in the demurrer. Here the fact averred by the demurrer was the material fact on which the want of equity of the plaintiff rested. But if the demurrer uses argument in the form of an allegation of a fact, or avers facts not alleged by the bill, yet, if the apparent averments are, in reality, no more than arguments, or if the facts averred are immaterial, that is, if the equity or want of equity of the plaintiff does not depend upon the truth of those facts, the demurrer, though inartificial, is not vicious.

Cawthorne v. Chalk (2 S. & S. 127) is an instance of the first species of case. There the bill was by the assignee of one of two surviving partners of a partnership composed originally of three, for an account and dissolution. It alleged that there was no personal representative of the deceased partner; that the defendant was his only surviving next of kin, and was entitled to administration, but refused to take it out, or to permit the plaintiff to do so, so that plaintiff could not bring the representative of such deceased partner before the Court. The defendant demurred, and said, that, by the bill, it appeared that a representative of the deceased partner was a necessary party; and then it went on to aver, that no sufficient reason was alleged by the bill why letters of administration had not been taken out. Yet the plaintiff did not aver that letters of administration had been taken out, and had not made such personal representatives parties. Now, here, the matter alleged as fact by the demurrer, was the absence of sufficient allegation in the bill to shew why letters of administration to the deceased partner had not been taken out. This was, in truth, no more than importing into the demurrer an argument upon the effect of the bill; not an averment of a fact de hors the bill, on the truth of which the equity of the bill depended. And the Vice-Chancellor, Sir J. Leach, said, "A speaking demurrer as, where, by way of argument or inference, the demurrer suggested a material fact which was not to be found in the bill: that here there was much surplusage, it no suggestion of any new material fact."

In Davies v. Williams, (1 Sim. 5), the plaintiff filed bill of revivor, stating a supplemental bill and its aver, and certain proceedings under the supplemental bill; the death of the plaintiff in the supplemental bill; the appointment of the present plaintiff and two others his executors; and that plaintiff had alone proved, with power reserved to his co-executors. The defendant demurred for want of sufficient equity in the bill of revivor against the defendant, and went on to say, that the supplemental bill was improper; that the plaintiff ought to have applied by petition; that the supplemental suit was the only one sought to be revived; and then stated the absence of any allegation in the bill that the plaintiff's co-executors had renounced, and objected for want of their being parties. The Court, on argument that the demurrer was speaking, said, at the argumentative part of it ought not to have been introduced, but that it was mere surplusage, and did not render the demurrer a speaking demurrer. To these cases may be added two very recent ones, in which, in another form, the same sort of point arose. The first of which we allude are Lemmi v. Molander,—a case heard in October, 1847, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, not reported,—and a case of Jones v. The Earl of Charlemont, before the same learned judge, 28th June, 1848, also not reported*. In the first of these cases the bill alleged, in reference to a transaction taking place out of the jurisdiction, that an application had been made by the plaintiff at A., for relief, against the defendant, to a local tribunal of competent jurisdiction, but that the Court had refused to make any order, and had remitted the plaintiff to the proper tribunal of appeal at B. The defendant demurred, on the ground, among others, that it appeared by the bill, that the plaintiff's application had been conclusively determined by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction. The plaintiff's counsel urged, that the bill did not allege that the application had been conclusively determined, and that the demurrer, therefore, was a speaking demurrer, averring as a fact, that which was not averred by the bill. But the Vice-Chancellor held, that the demurrer merely put a construction on the language of the bill, and did not aver a distinct fact, and was not, therefore, a speaking demurrer. So, in Jones v. Charlemont the bill, which was by certain members of a company against others, charged, that the defendants alleged that fifteen persons were allottees of shares, and had paid their deposits, and ought to be made parties, and then charged, that such persons had brought actions for, and recovered, their deposits, and had no interest &c. The demurrer stated, that it appeared by the bill, that fifteen shareholders had paid their deposits, and yet such persons were not made parties. Now, the bill not only, it will be observed, did not allege that the fifteen persons were shareholders, but did not even allege that they were allottees, merely charging, that the defendants alleged certain persons to have been allottees, and charging that such persons, without saying what character they filled, had brought actions &c.; yet it was held, by the Vice-Chancellor, on the objection that the demurrer was a speaking demurrer, that the demurrer did not aver as a fact, that the fifteen persons were shareholders, but put that construction on the language of the bill; and that, though it might be an argumentative demurrer, it was not, as a speaking demurrer, bad.

The result of the authorities seems to be, that, in reality, on the question whether a demurrer is speaking or not, that which is to be looked at, is not the language of the demurrer itself, but the language of the bill referred to by the demurrer. If, on the true construction of the language of the bill, the effect of it is that which the demurrer imputes to it, though in different language, the demurrer will be merely argumentative, but not speaking. To be speaking, it must aver some fact, on the truth of which the equity turns, and which is not averred directly or by implication by the bill. Unquestionably, however, a demurrer artificially drawn, will confine itself to a repetition of the very words of the bill, leaving the construction of those words for argument at the bar.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

TRINITY TERM.—11 VICTORIA.—June 29.

This Court will, on Saturday, the 8th day of July next, and Monday, the 10th day of the same month, hold Sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the Motions and Applications which have been made and partly heard in the same Court, and in giving Judgment in the Cases now standing for Judgment.

BY THE COURT.

* The writer was present at the argument of both these cases, but states the substance of them only from memory, not having preserved any note. He believes, however, that the statement made is substantially correct.

Correspondence.

COMPENSATION TO PERSONS WRONGFULLY CONDEMNED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—Though I cannot unreservedly agree with Lord Coke, that "the common law is nothing but reason," yet I think, with him, that some of its most "amiable and admirable secrets" are to be reached only by deep diving, and I fear that you have rather hastily concluded, from an incomplete exploration of its depths, our old constitutional maxim, that the Crown can do no wrong, (not confined to the criminal law, but extending to every branch of the executive), ought to be altered in the manner you have proposed. I say that I fear this, because the suggestion recommends itself at once to our common notions of justice and humanity. The existing rule is intended to discourage negligence and to shut out fraud, which would otherwise occasion mischief far more serious than the accidental and very rarely occurring destruction of a man's character, and life or happiness, by the defective working of the social machinery, lamentable and lamented as such accidents must ever be. I am not sure even, that the alterations you suggest would not increase the amount of unredressed hardships of the kind to which you refer. At present, where a man is tried once for all, every exertion is made that the importance and finality of the occasion demand. No hesitating juror, no careless counsel, can comfort himself with the reflection, that the prisoner, if innocent, may appeal, (for your proposal cannot be carried into full effect without giving the right of appeal); no witness can hold back in the belief that his testimony, if it be important, may be brought forward at a new trial. Under the proposed system, we may expect to hear from the criminal bench, or in the jury box, expressions like those which too often proceed from the lips of a Vice-Chancellor: "I make the decree with hesitation, but I have the satisfaction of knowing, that, if I am wrong, I shall be set right in another place." How often will a carelessly convicted person, penniless, in bonds, removed from the scene of action, be able to procure funds or friends for a successful appeal?

Look now at the effect of such a change in the protection from crime and fraud of the innocent public—a much larger and more important class of innocents than that which finds its way to the docks, though too often overlooked by the advocates of humanity. Prosecutors and witnesses in posse are not easily induced to face the annoyance of a single trial. Will the prospect of a second encourage them? Above all, by what statute of frauds and perjuries will you protect the revenue from the gainful trade of fraudulent prosecutions which will spring up when the Crown is made liable in damages? A voyage to Australia at the public expense, and an honourable acquittal with 100*l.* damages on arriving there, would be a rational object of ambition to every enterprising scoundrel.

These, Sir, are some of the grounds upon which I think it probable that the severe but salutary rule in question was founded. Let us endeavour to prevent as far as possible the recurrence of those deplorable cases in which its hardship is felt, by improving the administration of the law; but let us not lose sight of prudence in striving after an unattainable perfection of humanity.
